We were pleased to meet with him and hear at first hand of the novelty of a north and south trip from the tropics to the temperate zone : from the land of white cottons and sun hats to that of overcoats and furs. He is returning there soon again where he is engaged in railroad and public works. He gives an interesting, if not very rosy picture of the island, Elections take place in December and they are to have a trial of autonomous government which Mr. G. thinks will end in rebellion, compelling the States to take full control. Evidences abound that 60 or 70 years ago the island had good roads and other civilized features but for a generation it has been cursed by bad or impotent government.
