John Collett thus recounts the origin of the polka:

Peasant Girl

ORIGIN OF THE POLKA.

A Dance That Was Invented by a

The polka is the natural dance for the feet of the people. Take in evidence its origin-a Behemian peasant girl was seen dancing "out of her own head," extemporizing from the sheer joy of her heart song, tune and steps. This she did on a Sunday afternoon in Elbejeinitz, and an artist, one Josef Neruda, who spied her, made a note of all he saw. The people of the town adopted the dance and called it the Pulka, half step. In 1835 It reached Prague, and Vienna in 1810, thence it spread rapidly through Europe. When M. Cellarius introduced It to the Parisians we hear that all else gave way before the "all-absorbing pursuit, the polka, which embraces in its qualities the intimacy of the waltz with the vivacity of the Irish jig." With becoming gravity the Illustrated London News reported the first drawing-room polka danced at Almack's, and followed this up on May 11th, 1814, with a descripthose who wished to shine should dance the whole.

X+++++++++++++++++++++++ BIBULOUS POET'S RHYMED DREAM.

A policeman passing the Queen's Borough Hall in Long Island City found a man asleep in the gutter there. He took him to the station and later the man was arraigned charged with being drunk. He said his name was John Smith, and that his home was "anywhere." His occupation was "Jack of all trades." He insisted that he did not belong to the union, and for that reason could not get work at his trade.

He repeated this and much more on the same line to the magistrate. He also informed the court that as a side line he wrote poetry, but only did that when moved by the spirit. The magistrate asked him if he had anything original about him, and the prisoner said he had. He explained that while he was sitting asleep before the borough hall he had a dream, and before being arraigned had made notes of it. He handed it to the court, and this is what the court read:
