PARIS IS A CHARMING CITY.

Once Rude and Repellant, it is Now the World's Beauty Spot.

The history of Paris begins with a collection of huts on the little island of La Cite, sheltering a horde of barbarians about the time when Caesar invaded the territory with his victorious army in the century preceding the Christian era. Paris grew century after century from such bowels increases the peevishness of small beginnings, until the time of Louis XIV., who made it one of the greatest of European capitals in the splendor of its external appearance as well as in its wonderful treasures of art. Napoleon L and Napoleon II. did much to develop the city by improvements requiring immense sums

More than any other city of Europe Paris to-day appeals to a wide variety of sculpture and architecture. It is an inexhaustible mine, yet at the same time it is regarded as a centre of advanced thought and investigation in every department of science. The metropolis has been for centuries and still is the gayest and most brilliant city upon the face of the globe, but to appreciate the Parisian capacity for amusement it should be seen during the festival of July 14, the date of the falling of the Bastile. The early part of the day is celebrated by a parade of the schoolboys of Paris, who are reviewed by the President of the Republic in front of the Hotel de Ville, in the very square where once the public executions took place-where the first victims of the great revolution of 1789 were put to death, where Louis XVI made public submission to the people, where Lafayette presented Louis Philippe to his subjects and where 600 of the communists of 1971 perished while destroying the grand old

No country in Europe suprasses France in the industry and self-respecting thrift of the people, yet in Paris is found on every hand picturesque groups of loungers adorning the steps of churches and public buildings. These quiet, orderly, apparently peaceful loungers are the very antithesis of the nervous, hurrying crowds in an American city, yet this same indolent class has formed a dangerous element in the body politic, for in times of political Senator Smith's Lesson and and How strife the flerce Parisian mob has been largely recruited from these idle people.-Detroit Free Press.

Collector of the Port C. Wesley the late Senator George Handy Smitl was forced to bend the knee to the two ounces of common soap. power of the press. It was when that well-known legislator represented a city district in the Pennsylvania Senate at Harrisburg. There were times when Senator Smith was strenuous in pooh-poohing the influence wielded by the newspapers. He always maintained that he was invulnerable to their shafts. Despite this, few men were liked so much as the genial Senator by the newspaper correspondents. There was one paper in Philadelphia which Senator Smith, in season and out of season, always belittled.

To its representative he was always fond of saying, "Your sheet is never read." There came a day of retribution, however, when the Sauator was effectually silenced. "My paper never read," confided the correspondent to his associates. "Well, I'll show the Senator how wrong he is. I'll open his eyes and close his llps"; and this is what was done: One night in sending off his batch of news to his paper the correspondent closed his "copy" by adding the following innocent-appearing paragraph: "Senator George Handy Smith has fifty copies of the superb Bird Book lately issued by the Legislature. He will shortly mail them to his friends." That was all; but what worry it cost the Senator! A few days after the publication of the paragraph Senator Smith was in his seat in the Wigg-Bjones married a cooking Senate. He called a page and requested that his mail be brought. The boy lugged in a huge basket filled with letters. The Senator gazed at it, but said nothing. A minute later the page appeared again with auother basket equally full. Then the C. Senator began the task of opening the missives. They were all alike, is sent direct to the diseased and all contained requests from sturdy constituents for a copy of the much-prized Bird Book. Some one shoved a copy of the despised paper containing the above-mentioned paragraph under the Senator's eye. He read. He was enlightened; nor afterward did he have a disparaging word to say against the power of the press. Worse than all, every letter had to be answered !- Philadelphia Evening Telegraph.
