EXPERIMENTS IN CANADIAN PORK PRODUCTION.

Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

It is not altogether desirable that agriculture should be organized on the same lines as great manufacturing en-terprises, but it is desirable above everything else that the best information available as applied to agriculture should be at the service of each individual farmer. It has appeared, also, desirable that he should receive encouragement and, where needful, the co-operation of governments, at the be-ginning of his organised co-operation with other farmers, with merchants frail. and with transportation companies, for the improvements of products, the extension of markets, and the bettering is expected from Mrs Rev Nelson of of transportation. The Department of Agriculture is endeavoring to provide these forms of help; and this is one of the channels through which that assistance reaches the farmer, and a knowledge of the farmer's wants reaches those capable of supplying them.

Experiments in pork production were commenced at the Central Experiment- ed out some of whom were not natural Farm, at Ottawa in 1890, by Pro- ally adapted to the arduous task of fessor J. W. Robertson, who up to 1896 spring work. However a very enjoywas agriculturist, the work was continued from 1896 to 1899 by Dr. W. Saunders, the Director of Experimental Farms in the Dominion; and for the balance of the decade was supervised by Mr. J. H. Grisdale, B. Agr., the present Agriculturist.

The breeds introduced in 1899 were Berkshires, Improved Large York- honeymoon trip and intend to stay a shires, and Essex. The Yorkshire-Berkshire cross proved, however a growthy pig, and well fitted for general use. Where quick growth and early maturity are especially desired the Berkshire-Tamworth cross will fiil the bill.

Where these breeds have been crossed with the Chester-white, the Poland-China, or the Essex, the get, in most to economy but a glance at the esticases has proved to be of a short mates of the House leaves this idea an blocky type. There is a gradual increase in the quantity of feed consumed for every pound of grain in live weight after the average live weight exceeds 100 lbs.

The most economical time to slaughter swine is when they weigh from 175 to 200 pounds.

The greatest and most economical gains are made when the swine are

Frozen wheat may be used as a profitable food for swine. Skim-milk adds most materially to the value of a grain ration, and 100 pounds of mixed grains equal about 700 pounds of skim-milk. The relative value of skim-milk in any ration varies with the amount fed, the poorest returns per pound fed being obtained when the proportion of skim milk to the total food is the greatest.

The average dressed weight swine is about 76.44 per cent. of the fasted weight.

When hard flesh is desired skimmilk is a most valuable addition to the grain ration. Feeding mixed moal (barley, poase, and oats) with milk will generally insure firm meat. The greatest gains from a given amount of grain have been shown when it is ground, as a part of grain fed whole gets frequently voided before being digested. Mixed grains are more economical than grains fed pure.

In one set of experiments in which ground grain was fed dry and compared with ground grain ted soaked, the data pointed to a slight loss from soaking meal. While this may not be the actual case it is probable that the result from soaking meal may not be so marked as from soaking whole bull. Nothing pays better than good
