Marrying for Money.

In England a man who marries for money is regarded as having hardly done the dignified thing, but as having done the only thing possible, being poor and a gentleman. In France and Germany he is looked upon as a decidedly smart fellow to have been able to do it. There is no nonsense about the hunt for a thing is to catch her. I had a friend of her in no other way, used to propose between floors in the hotel elevators.-Argonaut, San Francisco.

Dawson's Rise.

Four years ago Dawson was a place unmarked on any map, a few tents, with goldseekers, alone forming the place. Now it is a city with an assessment of $12,000,000, electric lighting, telephones, public halls and handsome residences. And what is most satisfactory of all, it is claimed to be the best behaved city in the world. Nowhere, says Mr. Wade, the public prosecutor, is law and order more strictly observed. ## SHIRLEY BARE ON KEEPING ONE'S LOOKS

Has no one ever asked himself. "What business have women to look so plain and haggard as soon as they turn their quarter century; or what on or by. necessity is attractiveness at the age when they begin to be worth knowing?" The chatter of youth and of rosebud girls is insipid. They are awkward in giving opinions as a novice in carving a chicken. It is instructive to note the rising idea that the finest young men of the day are prone to marry women older than themselves for want of intelligence in girls nearer to their own appropriate age. The marriage lists call for explanation of the disparity between ages, and a young man has is not rest and sleep is not written an article somewhere discussing the reasons why men strong intellect and warm feeling is poor; there is little nutrifall in love with older women when they have a chance. The attachment is so strong, the bonds so proudly worn in these cases that the query is: Why on't women oftener give men the chance to adore them, when they are most worth adoring, an why do they make the experiment so hazardous to repeat? The man never gives a surer proof of his at traction than when he ignores the difference of age, and a woman should reward such tribute by reserving long her summer bloom. In grief and chagrin again we repeat: "What business have women to fall off in charm when brain and morale are at their prime ?"-Shirley Dare.
