THE CIRCUS GIANT IN THE STILT ACT.

"Oh, yes," said the old circus man, "we tried the great giant on stilts. As a matter of fact, his stilt walking was one of the greatest things he did; but for all that he did it only one season, on account of the risk to the giant involved in it.

"Of course, the stilt business was an outdoor act; and, as far as that goes, there wasn't always room for it even there; that is, where we plause by ruling that a wife has wanted to give it. The giant's stilt walking was commonly done in our circus parade before the beginning of the show, the giant marching at the head of the procession. B. F. Avery & Sons, of Louisville,

Ky., describe as follows their ex-

ing water to their workmen during hot weather, especially those employed in their forging, foundry and other departments where there is intense heat. They take stone jars or kegs, holding about 10 gal. of water filled with water and a small quantity of ice, pack the jar in a barrel with sawdust between the inner and outer vessels. Thus the water is kept cool with a minimum of ice. Each morning they place about 1-2 pint of oatmeal, rolled oats, or any to sell teas, coffees, baking powders, spices other form of crushed oats in the water. This crushed oats thus used makes the water a remarkable thirst quencher. During the several years that they have thus provided drinking water they cannot recall a case of heat prostration or illness due to excessive drinking of water by men employed in their shops, where the heat is great. They also find that this water reduces the appetite for intoxicating drinks, and in general the effects are so excellent that their men are telling it to workmen in other shops and cities. The jar should | drudgery and makes silver cleaning a pleas be emptied and thoroughly cleansed every morning, as the oatmeal sours ing cup also ought to be scalded and men to seek intoxicating cooling of the men, but very soon they find

BOILED TO DEATH.

Henry VIII.'s Time.

In England, during the reign of Henry VIII., the public mind became greatly excited through several cases of poisoning, and parliament enacted a law making boiling to death the penalty. This law was on the statute books about sixteen years. It was made retroactive, so as to take in a case that chiefly prompted its enactment-that of Richard Rosse, otherwise Coke, the Bishop of Rochester's cook, who poisoned seventeen persons, two of whom died. Coke was boiled at Rochester. The infliction was attended with peculiar cruelty. as Coke was put into a cauldron of cold water and gradually cooked to

A few years later, in March, 1542, a young woman named Margaret Davy was punished in a similar way on conviction of poisoning. The public were not satisfied as to her guilt, and, notwithstanding the comparmained on the statute books, however, as long as Henry reigned, perhaps because the monarch himself had a dread of being poisoned. Immediately after his death parliament repealed the law.
