Conflicts between cattle and sheep men are becoming more frequent, and the slaughter of sheep and killing of flock tenders are rousing the people to a pitch of fury that will result in a general outbreak unless some relief comes soon.

Antipathy to Sheep.

This odd conflict of grazing interests had its inception in the natural lighted. antipathy that cattle have for sheep. This antipathy is so strong tween twenty and thirty minutes, upon which sheep have grazed, and the water, unless it be running, of which they have drunk. Sheep are herded closely, in bodies of 500 to 1,000, and are usually moved slowly in one direction. They nibble off every blade of vegetation so close to the earth that even the roots are destroyed, their feet trample what is left into the earth, and as a result the land over which they have passed is left an almost barren waste, upon which grass will not reappear for several seasons. The odor left behind by the sheep is very offensive to cattle, and the latter would rather starve than vice in the churches and their paintfeed where sheep have been. But there were plenty of yucca plants, upon which the goats subsisted well. They did not encroach upon the stockmen's pastures nor interfere with them, but the outlaw raiders swooped down upon this peaceful community, bound and gagged the herder, Lloyd Kellogg, and killed a large portion of the goats.
