THE GAMEY TRIAL

Good progress has been made during the week, and the end is getting well in sight. Mr. Gamey has concluded his evidence, which in the main, as brought out by his counsel, agreed with his statement in the House, but as brought out by Mr. Johnston's cross-examination reveals discrepancies.

So much depends on the point of view, that it is difficult to speak without bias. However, we believe disinterested men will admit that the case sought to be made out by Mr. Gamey is in danger of collapsing. For, the charge of bribery by patronage has fallen through, only two whom Gamey recommended having been appointed, and one of these a Grit and would have been appointed anyway. Besides, it has been shown that the government has consulted other Conservative members, in a purely business spirit.

Again the story of the stenographers in hiding is in such a state now that judge or jury could make no use of it. One of them was not a stenographer at all, not one of them took a single note (on their own admission) but met next night to recall the conversation, not one of them knew Sullivan, and the written records have been lost.

The "prominent Liberal lawyer" was Aylesworth, K. C., he admits having met the two worthies, received a request for a loan from Mr. Gamey, thinking it might be some small amount of a temporary nature he asked how much, and was startled to hear $3000 or $4000. Mr. A told him that was not his department of his firm's business, and discovering the man was "for sale," bowed him out of his room.

The interview with R A Grant was of Gamey's seeking through Sullivan, Grant was leaving town but spared time, about 3 minutes, to meet them, his interest in a timber transaction was asked, but having no particulars ready he asked them to prepare their case, thinking he could get a client for them in a legitimate way. Mr. Grant's statement to counsel and bench, that he had never seen nor dealt with them since that 3-minute interview, effectually clears Mr. Grant. However there was money paid, this has to be traced, and if Mr. Gamey or his counsel can connect this with Mr. Stratton in a criminal way Stratton must fall. It is too soon to form judgments but so many break-downs before a single witness of the defence has been heard can not be comforting to Mr. Gamey.

A rumor was around Monday and Tuesday that he had "skipped." This is not probable and we put no faith in it. Saving an adjournment for Sir Oliver's funeral, the trial will go steadily on this week, and next week will see it close.

A strong desire exists to see Sullivan in the box, but it seems the prosecution are not going to call him. Why, is not known. The Judges it is thought will call him themselves, if no one does it. From the way the Judges are handling the case, it must surely be admitted by all that a Commission is better than a Committee of the House.

Later.—Mr. Gamey is in Buffalo it seems, several damaging transactions having taken place about the time he was leaving on Saturday. He stated to a News correspondent he was coming back when he was ready. Meanwhile the commission has adjourned till Thursday waiting for Mr. Gamey. Mr. Stratton is still in Ontario.

SIR OLIVER MOWAT GONE.

Universally Honored.

Sunday morning last about 10 o'clock this well-known statesman, the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province, died at Government House, Toronto, at the age of 82 years.

In January last a fall broke or injured his leg sufficient to lay him off active exercise but in no way impairing his mental usefulness. He was recovering from that nicely, when, on Sunday, 12th inst, while being assisted to bed, his thigh-bone broke in a mysterious way. He bore up cheerfully for two days and hopes were entertained he would even survive this, but on Tuesday evening, he got suddenly worse, the shock was telling and to the surprise of his physicians he lingered till Sunday.

His passing away recalls his long public career: for over 50 years he has been a prominent figure in public life, and the feature of his prominence most pronounced was his integrity of character, and his assiduous labors for the public good.

He lived to outlive all public rancor, he died without an enemy and very touching has been the numerous references from public men on both sides of politics, to his wonderful personality and career.

He is buried, to-day, Wednesday, a State funeral, attended no doubt by many old time friends and opponents, and the Province of Ontario will never know a truer friend.

The following extract from "Saturday Night" is particularly good:

"In many respects Sir Oliver Mowat might have thought and spoken of himself as the 'last leaf on the tree,' for at the age of eighty-two he was practically the sole survivor in Ontario of a political generation that has utterly passed away. Sir Charles Tupper and one or two others who might be named were, like Sir Oliver, great figures in the politics of the Confederation era. But Sir Charles Tupper is not an Ontario man, and in this province the Lieutenant-Governor had lived to see all his early colleagues and associates in the Parliaments of the country predecease him.

For several years now, Sir Oliver, by common recognition of his great services and distinguished character, has been virtually beyond the reach of partisan jealousy or criticism. No one questions that he was one of the most upright administrators the public life of Canada has produced. No one questions the value of his services to Ontario in defending provincial territory and provincial rights against federal aggression. Again in giving the quietus to the small but growing and dangerous annexation movement in the early nineties, Sir Oliver performed a service for which his country should hold him in grateful and loving memory. Sir Oliver Mowat had not the flashy (and frequently trashy) gifts that make politicians popular with the masses of the people. His successes were based on unostentatious virtues and substantial abilities joined with keen political insight, extraordinary caution and considerable love of power. He won the respect of Ontario by steady, unswerving devotion to the task of administering the people's patrimony for the people's benefit. No whisper was ever heard against the honor or the honesty of his Government. He was a consistent centralizer and canny as a political tactician, but these qualities fall to wholly explain his wonderful success as a party leader, which was due in large measure to the confidence he inspired in the average citizen."
