sets the American woman is in a bad way. The bishops and clergymen are anathemizing her on divorce and the doctors are alter her on corsets. The divines say that in another hundred years she won't have a shred of morals, and the specialists declare that at the end of this century she won't have a remnant of lungs. And when all's said and done, you know, a woman without morals or lungs is not a pretty sight. An eminent bishop got out his tongs the other day and attacked the divorce question very much as he would have handled a polecat. A brilliant physician is on the rampage just now for corsets. He demands legal penalties for the wearing of corsets. He states that a woman to be treated as such. The bishop declares that if divorce goes on in the present frightful ratio there will be no American wife. The doctor submits that if corsets go on squeezing in the present appailing fashion there will be no American mother.

I do not think it is quite fair to blame everything on the women. It is true that marriage is no longer the sacred institution it once was. It is true that our divorce laws are very bad. But who made the divorce laws? Not the women, surely. Why does not the good bishop pitch into the men lawmakers of our great and glorious

And for whom does lovely woman squeeze her waist? For whom does tight lacing. I'll tell you why. The ties for both these evils. average man likes a slender woman. He is always talking about a "trim waist' or a "slim, rounded figure." He refers to a stout woman as "a fat slob."

In the books he writes his heroines are always slim and willowy. They bend and sway like tall, slender lilies. A fat beroine is impossible.

Sienderness is deemed indispensable in society or on the stage. The newspapers reek with advice to women on how to get thin. And so the poor wretch who is piling up flesh and knowing that with it are going her youth and attraction resorts to the deadly corset to help restrain her overflowing avoirdupois. She pulls and tugs and straps and laces herself into an outrageous shape, and all to please some man or men.

"Woman is the race," declares Dr. Roberto Sangiovanni, "and if she will not protect herself she should be protected. Look at the Roman women. They did not use the corset, and their physical condition was perfect. But there are many more strong souls who suffer in silence, who never air their trials in the courts. Who seek to preserve the home and to uphold honor and decency.

Moreover, there is more than one way of being degraded. A woman may be degraded through the divorce court. Yes. She may be more degraded by living with a drunkard, a libertine, a criminal, an unspeakable beast.

The divorces of fashionable society, mere subterfuges for fresh | amours, are disgraceful and degrading. But the divorce that sets a puts new vigor into every heart, and
