It has been built between Barmen, Elberfield and Vohwinkel, and for part of the way it runs over the River Wupper, and for part through these three busy towns. It does not interfere with the street and road ordinary line, as it can be slung over rivers and back streets and the only land required is that necessary to plant the supports of the

In the case of the Barmen-Elberfield-Vohwinkel line the conclusion was arrived at that an overhead railway over the River Wapper was the only kind permissible, as an underground line would have been too costly, and there was absolutely no room for a surface railway or tramway. The question was whether the railway should be on the plan of the New York elevated ENTOMBED MINERS CUT OFF; railways, with the necessary girders placed in the bed of the river, or whether the suspended plan of Engineer Langen should be adopted. The latter won the day.
