While this singular plant seems to confirm the truth of Moses' story, it throws no light on the mysterious voice heard by Moses at that time. Perhaps, however, psychology and the "higher criticism" will account for the voice as being Moses' own feeling of surprise and awe at the remarkable phenomenon which led him reverently to take off his shoes in the presence of the wonder and to ascribe to God what seemed to him a miracle.

Whatever be the explanation of the voice, the plant is an actuality. and should be one of the interesting features of the St. Louis Exposition.
