Martin Gill Must Begin Anew.

Was Amazed at the Sights He Saw in New York.

New York, Nov. 5 .- Martin Gill, 29 years behind the walls of Sing Sing prison, returned yesterday to this city and wandered as one in a daze in streets lined with towering buildvelled without horses. He heard round about him the clatter of the elevated railroad and his eyes rested is looked upon as only a ruse to upon excavations in the earth. Gill lead to the theory of suicide. As he emerged from the Grand Central Station Gill's eyes rested on the elevated railroad spur, on which a train was in motion.

"They were building one of those in Greenwich street when I went up the river," he said to his benefactor. "So they can run cars on it all right, ch? The buildings are higher than I expected to see. And that is where the cars are to run under the ground? I've read about some of the things in the newspapers, though it's few of them I've been able to see, and, besides, when a man is up there for good and all as he thinks, it doesn't give him any comfort to be reading about the world outside.
