By One Who Travelled Round the World With Him.

Mr. Robert Jeffrey, who resides Cowichan, is the possessor of a remark able photograph of Vice Admiral Alexieff. It is superscribed as follows: "To Mr. R. Jeffrey, with my best thanks and compliments. E. Alexeieff,

Mr. Jeffrey, who is a retired marin: engineer, was chief aboard the steamer Africa, in which Alexieff traveled around the world, and he parted with the ship at Cherbourg, France. Mr. Jeffrey says that when he heard that

Vice Admiral Alexieff owes his high preferment not to his ability, which is decidedly mediocre, or to his distinguished service, which has not been conspicu ous, but to the fact that he is one of the wealthiest men in the Russian empire He is the owner of vast territories in Russia, and has a princely income. A Railroad Ambulance.

On every large railway system there is a train not scheduled on the time eard, but just as essential to maintain ing the service as any of the limiteds or locals. It is a passenger train, but the passengers pay no fare. It consists merely of two or three freight cars and a caboose, yet when it starts over the road everything else on wheels must give it precedence. If the President himself is en route in his special of private cars, he must take the side track until it passes by. As Kipling puts it: Oh, the Empire State must learn to wait

Few Wheeled Vehicles.

The armies now on these roads or bridle paths of Corea will find the matter of transportation of supplies and ammunition as difficult as Braddock found it in the Alleghany mountains a century and a half ago. Too Many Laws.

The truth is, of course, that we have too many laws already. We need not more laws, but the entorcement of those that we already have. Every law that is not enforced constitutes a peril to the entire legal fabric, and it is notorious, unfortunately, that fewer laws are enforced than are unenforced. The ratio of punishments to offences com mitted is so small as to be almost in fiitesimal.

This inevitably breeds contempt for law and constituted authority, not only upon the part of the criminal class, but in the minds of people higher up in the social scale. It has been well and truly said that the lynching mob is by no means the most sinister and menacing manifestation of disregard for law.

The Russian Rooster. (Toronto World.)

In vain do the nations meet and endeavor to minimize the horrors of war and protect non-combatants. "A Japanese 12-inch shell exploded in the yard of General Stoessel's house, outside Port Arthur. It broke a rooster's leg." The rooster probably knew little of the merits of the conflict, and it is not even stated that it wis crowing over any Russian victory. Wandering harmlessly round the general's house, and rejoicing in the approach of spring and the reappearance of the succulent worm, it observed the approach of a shell which it not improbably mistook for an eggshell. Thus without a moment's warning it was struck down and crippled for life, its beauty destroyed, its lordly strut gone forever. Henceforth it must limp through the fields of its ancient pride condemned to listen to the remark, made with tedious iteration, that i was the victim of a fowl outrage. Its only consolation will be the reflection that it takes a twelve-inch Japanese shell to break a Russian rooster's leg.
