PASSING OF NATURAL ICE.

Than to Cut and Transport It.

For several years past the business of | year. the icemen of former days has been decreasing steadily, and at the present gone. It is no longer necessary to wait for cold weather to secure a supply of the refrigerating product; it can be produced easily and cheaply in the warmest weather by chemical processes. In the State of Maine, where in former years the harvesting of ice for market in more southern latitudes was carried to enormous proportions, the total quantity cut during last winter, which embraced perfect conditions for the securing of a large crop, was but 485,000 tons against 700,000 tons gathered in the winter of 1902-03.

The advantages offered by chemistry and modern machinery for the production of ice and the perfect control of temperature at whatever degree desired, when and wherever needed, irrespective of climatic conditions, render their mechanical acquirements cheaper than can be obtained from natural ice when transportation from remote districts, cost of storing and the great wastage of original bulk through melting are taken into consideration. In all manufacturing necessity for cooling and for maintaining uniform degrees of temperature, as well as certainty of control of such conditions, together with their greater economy, present systems of artificial refrigeration are crowding nature out of the field of competition and reducing the latter to chiefly local value.-Chicago
