Chinese Burial Customs.

When a rich and important Chinaman dies his funeral is conducted with much comp and splendor. His friends and reatives, instead of sending wreaths, send innumerable banners. These are made of white silk, with inscriptions beautifully worked in black velvet, and express the senders' good wishes to the deceased himself or to the members of his family for many generations. On the day of the funeral these banners are carried by hired men, who are all dressed alike for the occasion. After the funeral, which lasts several hours at the cemetery, is over the banners are all brought back and eventually grace the rooms of the late Chinaman's house.

CAPTURING WIDOWERS.

Matrimonally Inclined Women . Prefer

Man Already Broken In. One of the puzzles afforded by the matrimonial markets is the preference of widowers for spinsters and the indifference of widows to bachelors. Statistics, manipulated by an expert statistician, prove that this parti-ality and prejudice exist. They show that in a given period 25,141 widowers sought to heal the breach in their domestic arrangements by espousing 25,141 spinsters, while only 8,147 widows were considered available for that provided for, and, although on their own testimony, most of the widows would have pretimony, most of the widows would have pretimony, most of them cheep second partners from the ranks of bachelors.

Having thus ners from the ranks of bachelors.

Having thus marshaled his figures, the statistician proceeds to the inevitable deductions, He expounds theories purporting to account for the predilection of the sexes when choosing a helpmate for the second, third, or fourth time. Several explanations are advanced. The thoughtless herd who have neither statistics nor theories of their own may take their choice. To start with, the statistician mainains that a man who has suffred conjugal bereavement is more anxious to repair his loss than a woman similarly afflicted. Indeed, so enamored is he of the matrimonial state It doesn't require much push to go enamored is he of the inattinonial if that he is willing to give it several trials if that he is willing to give it several trials if necessary, and each time, if left to his own Aply to Burton & Baldwin Mfg. In case some hard-headed pessimist should regret that philanthropic view as too visionary for his strenuous age, he offers another more practical suggestion. Every man likes to be boss in his own home.
