at will. The country is more passable in winter than in summer, for it is traversed by numerous rivers and marshes, which can be crossed only when frozen over, unless the traveller carries his boat on his back. But traveller carries his boat on his back. But the coming of winter the Lange utilize with the coming of winter the Lapps utilize the icebound rivers as thoroughfares in their travels. They know the best foraging grounds and the places where shelter may be afforded for a week's encampment. The resting places of these nomads within the Arctic Circle depend upon the more retained. moss growth, it does not take long for them to eat up everything around the settlement, even the shoots of the birch and willow trees, as far as they can reach, so away goes the band, and the place may be deserted for several years, as it requires three or four seasons for the moss again to spread over the ground from which it has been eaten. This is why the Lapp wanders through valley and over plain, as does the tribesman of the desert. He must move to live, but this sort of life has sharpened his wits, and he is as shrewd at driving a barwits, and he is as shrewd at driving a barbain as the proverbial Yankee or Scotchman. The hag of Lapland is depicted as uglier than any of Shakespeare's crones—a fit sub-ject to practise the black art—but the men, not the women, are the sorcerers, and use the drum and hammer and rings to bring misfortune to an enemy or fortune to a friend, or to foretell the future, but no woman can be present when the ceremony is being performed. It would render the spell powerless nad place upon the woman a serious, perhaps fatal illnesss. The drum, which is made of a light wood, has painted upon it a rude representation of the sun, the devil, and circles indicating the countries nearest to Lapland. The cluster of magic rings is placed on the sun, and the sorcerer beats a tattoo on the surface with his hammer. The strokes, of course, jar the rings so that they move and the direction which they take tell the fortune seeker the course of his future wanderings; also whether he will be prosperous or unfortunate. These mysteries have been handed down from father to son ever since the early days when their ancestors "sold wind" to the Norse seamen in braids of yarn, which, separated into strands, were guaranteed to produce a fav-

It is not strange that the aged women are ugly, when it remembered that years of bending over the fireside with the inevitable pipe have smoked them within and without almost into living mummies. When placed in her pulkah during the family migration, grandmother is as buried in furs as the youngest baby, and when the tent is put up at the new encampment she is the first to be carried in. The fact is that the true Lapp looks after his old better than his young. He may be thief, liar and vagabond, but this can be set down to his credit. After the aged come the reindeer, then the younger women and the children. The average Lapp of the north country hates water as much as a cat does, Such a thing as a wash is almost unknown. the winter families of a dozen or more live in their little snow-covered huts, crowded together like sardines in a can. The water they need for cooking and drinking comes from the snow, and fuel is so scarce that the idea of melting snow for bathing would be considered a crime. Consequently when spring comes they leave their tents with their skins nearer the color of leather than a human tint—the result of combining uirt and smoke. The Eskimo has been called the dirtiest race on earth, but it is a ques-tion if the Lapp cannot give an Eskimo points and beat him in this respect.—New York Tribune.

HELD CAPTIVE BY A TIGER.

Terrible Experience of an English Officer With a Man Eater.

Major Ridan, of the Bengal Lancers, was hunting with a small party, and one afternoon he wandered away from camp a short distance and stretched out under a tree for a nap. He had not slept more than a quar-ter of an hour when he was aroused by what semed to be the purring of a cat, only the sound was much louder. He had never neard the purr of a tiger or a panther, but realized in an instant that one or --e other had come creeping upon him as he slept. The tiger, as was afterward ascertained, had his lair within a few hundred feet of or two, a paw was placed on the officer's shoulder, and he was turned over on the broad of his back. Through his eyewinkers he caught sight of the paw, and then realized that he was in the clutch of a full-grown tiger. For the moment he was rejoiced. A panther hasn't the good nature of a tiger, and is also more treacherous. A tiger will starve before he will feed on anything he has not killed with his own paws, while a panther will grab at anything that comes in his way. When the man had been turned on his back, the tiger sat up like a dog, and purred like the great cat he was. The beast was rolling and purring when and the move the tiger made astonished him. He turned like a flash and bounded six feet into the air, to whirl again and stand head to camp. As the neigh was not repeated, the tiger

Figure Seven in the Bible. The phenomena of the figure 7 and its multiples occurring in the New Testament have been touched upon by Ivan Panin, a Russian student of the Bible, who for a number of years has made his home at Grafton, Mass. This significance of the "seven" group will not be lost, even upon the superstitious, who are outside the pale of Scriptural points, and, as Mr. Panin has shown them, their relations of their groupings to the first eleven verses of the New Testament must suggestiht they were scarcely chance, says the Chicago Tribune. For instance, in these first eleven verses of Matthew, the vocabulary consists of 49 words, or seven sevens; of these words there are 28, or four sevens, which begin with vowels, and 21, or three sevens, which begin with consonants.

"This distribution by sevens between vowel words and consonant words justly might have been deemed accidental but for the fact that of the 49 words 42 of them are nouns—six sevens—and seven are not nouns," is the comment of the writer. "Of the 42

nouns there are 35 proper nouns, or five sevens, while seven are commno nouns. Of the 35 proper names four sevens are male ancestors of Jesus and seven are not such. Not only, then, is the distribution of the 49 words of the vocabulary by sevens as between vowel words and consonant words, but also as between the parts of speech.'
As a further and absolute proof that these chenomena of the sevens are not accidental, Mr. Panin points out that the 49 words of the vocabulary show 14 words that are not used but once, while 35 of them, or five sevens, are used more than once. His conclusions, after an exhaustive arrangement cf the "seven" features are that "not even the choice of the languages in which the Scrip-

A Sure Way of Saving.

An ingenious method of putting his savings beyond his own reach has been adopted by a German writer, who found from dire experience that all his profits melted away as soon as earned. Consumption having made £16,000 in a fortunate literary speculation, he placed the whole of his money, together with his will, in the Imperial Deposit Bank at Berlin, and on receiving the receipt from the cashier deliberately tore it up. The cashier thought he was mad and told him angrily that it would take fully three years before he could expect to obtain a duplicate receipt. "That is just why I have torn up the origin-"and now the money is safe for that time."—The Golden Pansy.

Alcohol Depopulating Normandy.

The population of the five departments ments of Normandy is 150,000 less than it was thirty years ago, and the decrease is attributed wholly to the excessive use of aicohol. M. Debove, the dean of the Paris Faculty of Medicine, shows how alcohol operates in two directions toward the diminution of the population by raising the average of mortality and by weakening the vitality of the majority that survive. There are places in Normandy where the consumption of brandy is more than a quart per day per head of the adult population.
