Confidence . . .

Confidence between the merchant and his customers is the surest foundation for his success in business. To merit and retain the confidence of cur clothing customers has been our constant aim and we exercise the greatest care in selecting styles and materials that are sure to please the most exacting and then we in an excellent position to supply our customers with Tailor-made Clothing.

During the past month we have received large shipments of Men's and Boys' Suits and Men's and Boys' Overcoats and we are offering them at prices that mean money savers to those who take advantage of them. So many goods are cheaply put together, the proper price is not paid for the making, there is no exactness in cutting that the finished garment in outward appearance may seem equal to ours, but after it is worn, the difference is clearly shown.

Particular Dressers wear Progress Brand Clothing

It has the Fit, the Hang and the Style, the Finish that pleases fastidious young fellows.

Our business is growing every season because we do give better values throughout and have the fullest confidence of our customers, because we sell every item in our stock on smallest possible margins.

DR. CAVEN DEAD.,

"A Prince and a great man has fallen in Israel "may well be said of him who on Thursday last died at his home su Toronto after a few days illness, at the age of 74. He rallied from a serious illness a year ago and was again at work, but contracted pneumonia about a week before he died. The references to him in press and pulpit are all couched in a warm laudatory strain showing a deep sense of and an abiding appreciation of his many virtues, at our request given us the follow- yrs. ing tribute:

"The country at large as well as the Presby moulder of men for the gospel ministry. His greatness is seen by the space left vacant by his death. There is scarcely a religious or philaunstitution in the country that aid not look to him as a friend and heiper, and far beyond the direct help he gave to organized bodies, his earnest and devout spirit was felt, and his counsel and sympathy sought.

"Perhaps no better test can be given of a man passed away. In the pulpit there was Dr. J. M. King, whose exposition of scripture and grasp of vital principles gave me an insight and inspiration that has never left me. In the University there was Professor Young, the greatest teacher I ever things and tracing them to their unimate principles, I owe to Professor Young. In Knox college there was Principal Caven. He was less as a teachthere was Principal Caven. he was less as a teachthan Dr King, but possessed of gifts and graces Forest, were conveyed to the home of that made his influence unique. Everything he took up was presented with a clearness that carried assent, not because he said it, but because you saw the very principles spread out before you. Dr Gregg says that his presence was as the conscience to any gathering while all the time he was most thoroughly unconscious of the power he was weilding. No one judged others more kindly or put himself further about to give a genereus interpretation of the motives and senuments of another, yet no one was more discerning in his praise, none for whose brame we had such reverence. With all his own clearness of mind, none had such patience with dunness and none more ready to adapt himself to others' weakness. In public gatherings no question seemed properly settled till he had given the finishing touch. With a nature earnest and habits almost puritanic, he had a hu-mor that was refreshing but always linked with a kindness that was a benediction. Once I had tea with him when there was no "company" to disturb the regular order of the household, and as he Corley, Dr. R. H. Richardson, Thorpe gave out the psaim at family worship and led the such a sense of the simplicity of his childlike faith Thos. H. Rorke, F. S.
