Good Judgment in Feeding Steers

Don't Waste Meal. Roughly speaking, steers for feeding may be divided into two classes, namely long-keep steers, which on account of light weight or thin market; and short-keep steers, which are heavier and more fleshy.

LONG-KEEP STEERS. Long-keep steers are all the better to receive practically no meal during the first month they are in the stable, or at the most, merely a sprinkling of meal on their other food.

SHORT-KEEP STEERS. The same general principles apply in the case of short-keep steers as in the case of long-keep, with the exception that, since the short-keep steers are to be finished in three or four months, it is necessary to increase the meal ration more rapidly.

TO PROSPECTIVE SETTLERS. A recent issue of the Western Globe published at Lacombe, Alberta, gives some interesting facts about the country opened up by the extension of the Lacombe branch of the C. P. R.

THE OUTLOOK FOR SEED CORN. Get in the Ear if Possible. The difficulty of getting reliable seed corn of desirable types and varieties during the last two years has been the question of reliable seed for 1905.
