Mrs. Hannah Taylor, mother-in-law of deceased, described the condition in accepting the advice of members of which she found the deceased when she called at his mother's house on Saturday. Dec. 24. He was in bed, and Mr. Brundrette was wiping blood from his nostrils. She advised Brundrette to wet a towel and apply it to the back of the head, as she had known it to be effectual in such cases. Mr. Brundrette said: "That is malice. You would not use malice." She felt strongly in the matter, because she was interested in Wallace's recovery. On the following day when she called books were being read to the deceased, but she could not say what they were, as she was not sufficiently interested in the matter at the time. Deceased then seemed feverish and low.

More Medical Evidence. Dr. Carveth said he was called by Mr. Brundrette to go to the deceased the day before his death. He asked Mr. Brundrette what was the trouble with the young man, and the reply was: "He is very ill in bed, bathed in perspiration and very weak."
