LATER.—Special correspondence in the Globe of Saturday last gives fuller details of this miserable mistake of justice, relating, what we did not know, that there was a tragedy springing from it.
The relatives and many friends of T. H.
will extend to him all sympathy in his great sorrow, while rejoicing that such complete vindication came to himself.

With R.*M.
House Stal The article in the Globe is as follows:

"A few months ago Mrs T. H. Atkinson of Ymir committed suicide, after having been socially ostracized; her husband had just stepped from the dock at the Assize Court at Nelson a free man on his holidays for the past two weeks returned to his position in Owen Sound a stain on his character. Mrs Atkinson died because of ill-natured gossip; to Atkinson irrevocable ruin and misery have come from the same cause.

Some evil-minded persons whispered that the druggist had fired his place for the sake of the insurance, and the po-lice arrested him, At once Mrs Atkinson was made to suffer also. At the time she most needed comfort she was deserted by her own sex in the mining town, the women of Ymir practically sending her to Coventry. This social indignity, added to her other troubles. served to throw her mind off its balance and she drowned herself in the reservoir.

The tragedy of his wife's death, added to the baseless charge preferred against him, made life almost unendurable to the unhappy druggist. However, Atkinson kept up the courage of despair and was arraigned at the Assizes at Nelson. The Crown presented its witnesses but the evidence was so shallow that the case gave signs of breaking down at a very early stage. When the Crown's meagre evidence was all in counsel for the prisoner said he would place his client in the box. But there was no need for that action. Peremptorily stopping the proceedings, the foreman of the jury told the Judge that if the evidence weather which prevailed and doubtless could bring, the jurymen felt that the kept many back from an otherwise very accused had no need to put in any defence; they were certain of his innocence. In order that the last lingering doubt might be removed from everybody's out a stain on his character. Atkinson left the dock.
