Necessity of Proper Breathing.

In the July Delineator Dr Grace Peckham Murray has some remarks on the care of the nose and mouth that will be read to their profit by all mothers. Of proper breathing, she says: If there are obstructions in either the mouth or nose which prevent the free introduction of air, the blood is not aerated as it should be, and the whole bodily nutrition suffers in consequence. The trouble occasioned by such a condition is much greater in a child than in an adult. If a child is not growing well, if he is pale and puny, the nose and mouth and throat should be examined to discover if there are any obstacles to free breathing. Between the nose and the throat, and generally out of sight, are spongy growths called adenoids. They interfere more effectually with the free entrance of air than anything else, and as they exist unseen they are often the unsuspected cause of a child's ill-health. If a child breathes with the mouth open and not through the nose, they are likely to be present. If there are many of these growths to give rise to catarrhal discharges from the nose, and they will also interfere with the hearing. They sometimes occasion the swelling of the glands of the neck and cause inflammation which results in open sores. Children suspected of having these growths should be taken to a surgeon to be examined. The main thing to be borne in mind is that the only proper way for a child to breathe is through the nose.

TOPICS OF THE WEEK

—King Alfonso of Spain, while riding with President Loubet as a guest of France, was nearly the victim of a bomb outrage a few days ago. It was flung too far and did little damage. The young King took it so fearlessly that he aroused an increased enthusiasm. He is now being feted in England.

—The nominations for the bye-elections in London and N. Oxford will be held to-day Tuesday. There is a tremendous partizan excitement in both constituencies, with great pressure being brought to bear by Toronto papers and politicians to secure the defeat of the autonomy bills. There is a possibility of defections in N. Oxford but London will not likely elect Hyman, with all the added prestige of Minister of Public Works.
