The Captivity of Judah-2 Chron-36: 11-21. Commentary .- I. Zedekiah's character and folly (vs. 11-13). 11. Zedekiah-He | was one of the younger sons of the He was a weak king with no strength of character to do what he knew to be right. "Anxious to follow the counsels of Jeremiah, but without courage to do so, he became the mere sport of factions, and at last was brought into ruinous conflict with Babylon against his own better judgment. He was a Charles I. or Louis XVI. when the country needed a Longshanks or a Cromwell."-Guthrie. 12. humbled not himself-Although Jeremiah repeatedly entreated Zedekiah to obey the word of the Lord, yet the king through the pride of his heart and for fear of offending his princes would not listen to the prophet's advice.

13. rebelled, etc.—This was the height of follly. Had he possessed wisdom and courage enough to obey the words of Jeremiah and remain true to his allegiance to Babylon, Jerusalem might not have been destroyed. made him swear-Nebuchadnezzar had bound Zedekiah by a most solemn onth to keep the peace by fidelity to the conqueror who had set him on the throne. "In Jer. 27:3 we find messengers from the kings of Edom, Moab, Ammon, Tyre and Zidon consulting with Hezekiah, perhaps concerting a plan to throw off the Babylonian yoke; and in Ezek. 17:15, Zedekiah is reprethe false prophets of his time (Jer. 28)." don's Com. the measure of iniquity" of this weak | son we see:

CHEAPER THAN APPLES.

Big Yield of Peaches in Niagara District

This Year. A St. Catharines report says: Already early peaches are coming in on the local market in large quantities, and to-day the price is down to 25 cents a medium sized basket. Dealers say that peaches will be cheaper than apples this year because there are a great many more of them. From all indications the peach crop in the Niagara Peninsula will be a monster one this year, and peaches will make up for scarcity in apples and other fruits. Owing to apple tres being so susceptible to the San Jose scale, grower in the Niagara district are cutting out their apple or chards and planting peach trees in their

EGYPT'S COTTON CROP.

Saved by the Reservoir at Assouan-Will Be a Record.

Alexandia, Aug. 21.-Egypt's official report of the Nile flood states that the river is very late and low. A "bad Nile" has been declared.

At Assouan the gauge is three metres below the thirty years' average. Cotton, the crop of which has been saved by the Assouan reservoir, is expected to be a record. The cotton worm s practically extirpated. The rice 'rop has suffered in many places. The surar crop is late. Irrigation of the delta and middle Egypt is assured by barrages. In upper Egypt the crops are doubtful, as large areas must remain unirrigated.

SCIENTISTS MEET REBUFF.

Will Not Be Allowed to Remain in Algeria to View Eclipse.

Paris, Aug. 21 .- A despatch to the Matin from Constantine, Algeria, says that Gen. Toroy has refused to allow the British cruiser Venus to remain at Philippeville, Algeria, for the observation of the total eclipse of the sun on . August 30, on the ground that Philippeville is a fortified port, to which it impossible to admit representatives of a foreign nation. The Venus is conveying Sir Normal Lockyer, director of the Solar Physics Observatory, and a party of astronomers, who will now be obliged to take quarters at Palma, Spain.

The Philippeville newspapers are cry-ing out against the General's action on account of the loss to business that will be entailed. They point out that the United States cruiser Dixie was allowed to anchor at Bona.

You cannot repair by flight the injury you have done; you will bu add a sharper sting to it by publicity You are no child, Jeanne; you have proved yourself too much a woman think before you set every tongue wagging, every finger pointing at the man whose love you won by deceit and cor cealment! Besides," and his lips twist into a painful smile, "why should you cast aside all you have played for? You are the Marchioness of Ferndale, this is your house, your settlement deeds are in my lawyer's hands already signed Yesterday I reverenced your simple, generous, childlike nature too deeply to speak of such matters; to-night, knowing what I know, I can speak out. have made as ample, and more ample provision for you, than if you had a score of lawyers at your back. A this is yours, you cannot leave it-you have robbed me of my heart, do not take away my good name by leaving your home.

She is at the door, but she hesitates of the last word, touches her to the heart and wrings it. With a low cry, sh Finks into a couch and bides her face.

Vane turns whiter than before, his mad passion, already half spent, falls suddenly like an exhausted flame, With a groan he strides across the room and kneeling beside her, lays his burning hand on her bare arm. "Jeanne," he breathes fiercely, "say that you love me-"

At his touch, at the almost savage energy of his words, she shudders and springs to her feet. It is her turn now, "Do not touch me," she breathes, all the passionate indignation of a wohan scorned blazing in her eyes. "Do not come near me. You have driven me half mad, but I have sense to remember what you have accused me of. You-you ture. "You think me false, and treach erons, and deceitful. You hate and despise me! but you will not let me go back, though I want to go-yes, want to go! But it is not true that I deceived you -you do not understand why; you cannot, you are too unjust! I did deceive you, and I will bear the punishment, Because I did it I will stay; I will not do you any further harm, as I have done you so much. This great place is large enough for both of us. You have said that we are apart-we will keep so. I will stay until you tell me I may go -until you tell me that I may go!" and with a sob she presses her hands to her eyes and moves toward the door. He rises slowly, and looks at her with a bewildered stare. Is this Jeanne-the yielding, loving girl, who used to cling to him blushingly, so childlike in her ways and words that it seemed desecration to kiss her? This proud, pas ate, indignant woman cannot be Jeanne. But surprise is mingled with and overborne by admiration. Never has she seemed so lovely in his eyes as she appears now-her lithe, graceful figure drawn to its full height, her eyes mashing like diamonds, her lips apart.

"Jeanne," he cries, hoarsely, "what I have said 1-for neaven's sake forget it! Jeannie, come back to me! 1-there is some mistake-"Yes," she says, with a look of anguish, "you thought you loved me." "Some mistake-I have been mad!

Jeanne-my Jeanne-forgive me! come back to me!" And he moves toward her with outstretched arms. But Jeanne, the old Jeanne, is not to be whistled back to his finger like a tame bird; rather, like an eagle, she is soaring above him, and beyond his reach, With one lithe movement she moves away, extending one hand to keep him "No," she breathes, "no-no! I cannot forget! We are apart-apart!" Terrified in his turn, he holds out his hands to her. "Jeanne," he implores, "have you forgotten 1-1 love you, Jeanne! Have you lost all love for me so soon?" A sharp pang seems to wring her heart, "Yes," she breathes "I did love you, but not now-not now. You have driven my love away. Do not come near me!" He has made a step toward her, but at the gentle, cold words he stops and folds his arms.

"You will have it so," he says, speaking with an effort. "From to-night we are to live apart-one only to the world, Oh, do not shrink!" for as he speaks, she has drawn further away from his-"I will not force your love. It was yours to give or to withhold. So be it -so ends this last hope of happiness!" "Crushed by your own hand," she says,

"by your own hand!" and without another word she turns and moves silently over the thick carpet to the conserva-

He scarcely knows that she has moved, but when he lifts his head and finds that she has gone, he starts forward, calling her name:

"Jeanne-Jeanne! Come back!" But before he can reach the curtain he hears the outer door close, and realizes that she has gone beyond recall. With a smothered oath he flings himself onto a chair, and looks about him with a dazed. vacant stare.

The black fit is passing rapidly, the som seems stifling and hot as a furna-With a fresh oath, the miserable victim throws open the window, and passes to
