Weapon Used by Natives of India Against an Enemy.

It is commonly reported though with what faith I do not know, that natives sometimes adopt a particularly diabolical and ingenious method of getting rid of an enemy, in such wise that the death shall be correctly attributed to snake bite. A small cobra or a kalait-asnake quite as venomous-is caught uninjured and a piece of string is tied to its tail. The string is then run through the hollow stem of a bamboo just large enough to contain the body of the snake, and by it the creature is dragged, tail first, inside the cane. Great care is taken not to injure the reptile in any way. Armed with this terrible weapon, the murderer waits for a suitable opportunity for using it. Nothing is easier than to approach the hut of his intended victim when he is asleep, and creeping through the open doorway to bring the end of the bamboo into contact with some part of his body. The snake, enraged and terrified by the treatment which it has received, bites as soon as its head touches the man. If the victim is sleeping soundly he is probably not even awakened by the slight puncture of the cobra's needlike fangs. He passes insensibly into death.

The next day his body is discovered, with all the unmistakable symptoms of snake poisoning, and save through an accident it is not even suspected that a crime has been committed. The murderer, having liberated the snake and destroyed the bamboo, is perfectly safe. Even if suspicion fall upon him it is impossible

Snake stories, more or less incredible, ply House, King street, Hamilton, Ont. to prove his guilt. abound. The following, which was told to me on such authority that I am forced to believe it, is a fair specimen: A cobra was discovered in the compound or garden surrounding an officer's bungalow, and the entire male portion of the household turned out to destroy it. The snake was driven from one hiding place to another, and at last it took refuge in a narrow culvert. All sorts of expedients were tried to drive it out. Shots were fired through the pipe and bundles of burning grass were thrust into it, without effect. Finally the culvert was dug up and the snake was found and killed. It was a large and handsome one, and, therefore, the skin was taken off and hung upon a nail driven into the wall of the veranda outside the bungalow. The next morning the owner of the house beneath it a second cobra skin. The natives one and all declared that the mate of the dead snake had come along during the night and shed its skin there through grief at its loss. This explanation being considered incredible, it was supposed that some one had indulged in a rather pointless practical joke, although the circumstances of the case made it difficult to see how this could have been possible. But whatever might be the true explanation there were two skins .- Pall Mall Gazette.

MEN SERVANTS NOT WANTED. Women are fast replacing men as servants in the houses of the wealthy. In the opinion of Miss Nora Beresford, who has a large clientele among the servants and employers of the West End, men servants have had their day. Housemaids and parlor maids are still required, but chefs, butlers and men servants generally are to an increasing extent becoming luxuries of the past. Nor is Miss Beresford's experience exceptional. The old idea of an establishment no longer obtains in the modern Shiloh smart set, who prefer the irresponsible life of flats and hotels to the care of

ORIGIN OF NEW YEAR CALLS.

Strangely Enough, the Custom Began in China.

The custom of making New Year's calls, which had a long run in America and is still extant, came originally from China, where, says Leslie's Weekly, such calls are one of the main features of the brilliant and lengthy New Year's celebration. A Mortifying Moment.

Every time we think of false teeth we are reminded of old Father Whitling, Baptist preacher at Council Grove. He was preaching one night when he abruptly turned his face in the direction of the choir and sneezed. He sneezed awfully hard and then looked wistfully in the direction of the choir. His false teeth were lying under the organ stool. None of the singers were gallant enough to return the ghastly things, and Brother Whiting was compelled to go after them.
