A Prayer.

Great Shepherd of the wandering sheep, Thou wilt not let me lose my way, If in my straining eye I keep, The lifted Cross of Calvary.

Thy well-known voice I still shall hear, Through tangled ways of moor, and fen. In interest accents, falling clear, To bring me to Thy side again.

The morning and the noon, are gone, The sun is singing o'er the hill, The twilight gray is stealing on, The evening wind is rowing chill.

Weary and weak, I journey on, Toward the warm nad sheltering fold, Where my loved are gathered home, No more to wander in the cold.

Keep me, dear Shepherd, close I pray, Thy guiding voice I need so sore, Lest from the certain path I stray, Amide the world's confusing roar. -Emily Bugbee Jonhson.

In Flora's Realms.

Unquestionably the most brilliant and gorgeous display of many hued beauty and of vivid lustrous coloring, whether achieved by nature or by art, is the dazzling spectacle presented by an important floral exhibition such as may oceasionally be seen in some few of the great cities of the world.

spell-bound and almost awe-struck at the night before was examined it was found the bewildering and overpowering richness and meteoric splendor, and the gor- mercially pure. What might have been the geous dazzling magnificance of the scene, a yeary blaze of bloom; a flashing pageant of startling rainbow hues. Here is a great bank of wonderful orchids; feathery spikes of gold and amethyst, voluted whorls of deep purple and lilac, or drooping racemes of cream color and mauve. Here a display of that best loved of all flowers, the rose; some tinted in roach's anatomy by the professional. The the hues of a gorgeous sunset, some a secret evidently was not what to use, but beautiful violet red, and some the purthe deepest sulphur. On here a massed dais of varied flowers, in deepest azure, fiery glowing crimson, blushing pink, or kaleidoscopie variegations; sheaves of panieles of the handsome vucca, or deftly trained specimens of that most gorgeous and remarkabl of all the floral world-the Gloriosa superba- a striking flower resembling a comet in full flight, its head a bright scarlet carmine its long caudated whirling tail gradually shading off to a bright primrose.

And then, satiated with this transplendent display of flashing color, the visitor proceeds to the miniature Japanese garden. Here a tiny winding rivulet splashes and eddys, or falls in diminutive cascades. Its rocky banks are fringed with various artificially stunted forest trees, none more than about a foot high, all in perfect health and viggreat age some are stated to be a hundred or more years old, and the statement can readily be believed -cedars, firs and many others. A range of peaked and jagged mauntains forms the background and the undulating landscape is diversified with minute flower gardens and picturesque glens and valleys, while bridges fashioned like the familiar old willow pattern span the purling stream. But the exigencies of space forbid any further reference to the many other floral beauties on view. Suffice it then to dulge for a moment in a rhapsody of the imagination and to revel in the thought that if this earth of ours can produce such a wealth of beauty, the supernal magnificence of the Realms of glory must be stately and noble indeed. And its portals will be freely opened to who, casting away their prejudices, with the profoundest humility supplicate the Almighty to lay their sins upon Him who bore the punishment upon the cross for them. PERSIAN SHAH'S PALACE. Cheap European Decorations Instead of Oriental Art. During the Shah of Persia's visits to France and other parts of Europe hissuite never tired of expatiating on the wonderful magnificance of the monarch's Persian palace. According to them it was a dream of Eastern splendor, and anything we poor western people could show paled into insignificance before the glittering beauties of the Shah's dazzling dwelling. But apparently this sort of talk was only Oriental bluff, M. Claude Anet, an observant Frenchman, has recently been in Persia, and, writing home from Teheran, he gives some eye opening details of the much vaunted palace of the Shah. In a country which, like Persia, has produced treasures af artistic decoration, it is rather curious to learn that the Shah admits no ancient ersian art within the walls of his palace. It is all cheap European and European of the cheapest and most vulgar kind. In the museum there are glass mases containing little paper fans still bearing their prices -616d., or hand glasses marked 2s. 6d. True, the famous peacock throne is there, but it did not come from Delhi, as it claimed, nor was it ever pressed by the form of the grand Mogul. It was made at Ispahan in the beginning of the nineteenth century, and many of the precious stones with which it was formerly decorated are said to have been replaced with glass. The gardens are lovely, but the apartments of the palace are filled with the most unlovely objects, said to have been received by his majesty as presents The Shah's special apartment is encumbered with musical boxes of all kinds and automatic musical machines.
