His children in and out of school Were well-behaved and bright; They reached the head of every class And studied day and night. 'It didn't take me half so long To learn what I beganwasn't such a dunce," complained The discontented man.

He went abroad, and viewed unmoved The Rhine's majestic flow, The snowy splendor of the Alps, The matchiess lakes below. "I want to get a steamer home As quickly as I can; There's nothing here worth seeling," cried

The Child That Came.

Elizabeth Whiting in the November Century O child my mouth has never kissed, My body never known, By all the joys that I have missed, I claim you as my own.

Love called you to me from the dark, But as your spirit heard, Death laid his fingers cold and stark Upon my heart that stirred.

I yearned for you with every breath, O never had, yet lost, While on my heart with touch of death Struck deeper down like frost.

I watched the tides creep out and in, The darkness wax and wane, The years lag by, and could not win To any rest from pain.

But as to-night I sit alone, With only shadows near, O child incredibly my own, I know that you are here,

I hold you tight against the ache Within my breast and croon

A song my mother used to make For me about the moon. O little child forever mine, Yet safe from life that harms,

Not all of human and divine

Can take you from my arms! The bitter road that I have trod Has brought this thing to be:

I need not give you back to God Who gave you not to me. Come soon or late the day when earth

Shall grant its gift of rest, The child to whom I gave not birth

Shall lie upon my breast. ----LIVED WITH BRAIN EXPOSED

At an inquest at Colchester on Color-Sergeant Harrison, of the Scottish Borderers, who shot himself through the head after returning from furlough, a military surgeon stated that, although deceased's brain was protruding from the wound, he was perfectly sane for 36 hours, and read a book with evident appreciation.

Two days afterwards, however, delirium tremens set in, probably as the after effects of drinking while on furlough. It was stated that Harrison had a comfortable banking account, having saved money while on foreign service. He belonged to Leeds.

Status of Married Women in England.

The history of the favored position which married women occupy in our legal system is not without interest. Un- I tries of the salad connoisseur on the con til comparatively recent times a married woman was considered in the eye of the law as no more capable of owning or dealing with property than an infant or married became her husband's. All she acquired during her marriage passed into his control and he had the sole right of dealing with it. She could not make a valid contract. She could not sue or be sued alone. She was, in fact, a legal nonentity, a mere shadow of her husband's personality.

Regarded from the standpoint of legal liability, her position still remains in many respects quite exceptional and anomalous. For example, the wife is entirely exempt from liability to pay for articles which fall within the category ies in society "necessaries" is a very feet upon the condition of the blood. elastic term and may include expensive articles of dress or jewelry.

Shortly afterward the lady's husband, who had been living with a vast show of wealth, was found to be utterly insolvent. He abrefused to pay on the pretext that she had bought the dresses as her husband's do so. But the firm knew nothing of or £3,000,000 net, that is, after deduct ceived of her having a husband was the | tion. fact that she gave her married name-a fact which, as was pointed out by one of the Judges, was entirely consistent with her being a widow. The case went to the House of Lords and eventually

A harder case is that of the tradesman who deals on credit with a lady enjoying a substantial income but discovers when he seeks to enforce payment that her income is subject to restraint on anticipation. The original idea of this re striction seems to have been to protect a married woman from the consequences lof her extravagance and the danger of her denuding herself of her property under the influence of her husband. Take the following case for the sake of illusit was held that the lady was not legally

A lary with a settled income of, say, a thousand a year, subject to restraint on anticipation, buys goods on credit for which she afterward declines to pay. The tradesman sues her, and as she has no defence he gets his judgment. But to his dismay he finds the judgment so framed as to put beyond his grasp the very means-viz., the lady's income-to which he had looked for the discharge of her debt. The lady may have a large credit balance at the bank at the very time when judgment is got against her, but the court will not permit the creditor to touch a penny of it; much less will he be allowed to lay hands upon subsequent ly accruing income. He is in the tantalizing position of seeing his lady debtor in possession of ample means to pay while he is utterly helpless to compel her to pay a farthing. On the other hand, if it be shown to be clearly to the lady's advantage that she should be allowed to anticipate her income, in spite of this restriction, she can apply to the court and get the restriction removed. But the court does not take the view that the payment of her just debts is sufficiently to her advantage to justify this procedure.-London Spectator.

SALAD DAYS.

There is no more agreeable or refreshing addition to a cold meat collation. especially in the fine warm days of sum- | Minard's Liniment Cures Colds, etc. mer, than a well-made salad. It is the experience of a good many persons that the appetite becomes lessened by the sight of food, and more particularly of animal food, on a hot day, and that this is not so much the case when it is ac companied by a fresh green salad, which not only renders the outlook of a meal attractive, so far as regards the palate, but encouraging also to the digestive organs. When there is no inclination to eat, or when, as it is commonly said. a person does not "fancy" his food' there is, as a rule, torpidity of digestive function. With the sight of tempting food the work of the digestive organs is begun. "The mouth waters and even the gastric juice flows in response to a pleasant impression. The salad, therefore, may fill fill a special and important gap in the dietary, and when it is prepared with oil, as every good salad should be, it becomes an excellent and agreeable vehicle for conveying fat into years the salad was an almost ignored dish in England, and its preparation was so badly understood and its attractive qualities were thereby so impaired that few were tempted to include the salad in the daily dietary. The demand for salad has since happily grown, thanks perhaps to the experience of an increasing clientele who have visited the countinent. But even now few English peofavored as is England with materials for making salads-materials which glow wild abundantly and which may be pos-

Eccentricities of a Professor.

It is seldom that we hear of a more eccentric man than was Professor (ed. mann, a Swedish theologian, who died a short time ago in Stockholm. One time during a prolonged illness he was compelled to remain in bed for many weeks, and during this time conceived a liking for lying snugly ensconced in warm blankets, free from the caprices of the weather and protected from the perils of catching another cold. After his illness the professor was seized with a senseless dread of taking cold and insisted upon keeping his bedroom windows closed down tight, and from that time until his death spent practically all of his time in bed, where he did all his regular work and ate his three meals a day. So very odd was he that in examining written exercises by the students he refused to touch the paper upon which they were written until it had first been warmed over the stove. It is claimed that the professor's death was actually caused by a visit from an old gentleman on a stormy day who desired an interview with him. This latter incidentally entered the chamber of the professor with his clothes covered with snow, a sight which aggravated the professor and he ordered his visitor to leave the room at once. Unfortunately the visitor was quite deaf and misunderstood him, approaching nearer to the bedside of the angry professor. Herr Oedmann became greatly alarmed and in his frantic excitement broke a blood vessel and expired.
