"I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills,"—David. Above the murky plains of life. Acove the moanings and the strife, I gladly lift my lo ging eyes To Itim who all my neets supplies.

Below, our vision is not so clear, Below, our hearts are filled with fear. But up where God in grandeur dwells He every lowering cloud dispers.

For there we breathe a purer air, An ampler ether, sweet and rare, Surrounds the trusting, sheltered soul. And all the storms His hands control.

From harm of sun or moon preserved, And for life's grandest service nerved, The heart on the eternal hills

Abides seeme from earthly ills. - Henry Alexander Lavely.

Fiery Thunderbolts.

Seattered throughout the depths of limitable space, all hurtling through the ether at inconceivable velocity, owning perhaps no allegiance to any one of the myriad suns which hold sway over their attendant planets, but wandering like lost stars in the chasm of the infinite are innumerable small metallic bodies. varying from a few tens in weight down to a few ounces or less, which are conjectured some to take their rise in resolv- | name. ing nebulae, others to be small fragments of suns or of planets which, either by collision, or by some terrific disruption, have been shattered and wrecked; the larger sections forming new minor planthrown parent, the smaller, not so amenable to the laws of gravity, hurled out into space, where they continue their sun or planet and end their career as suddenly as it was originated.

And when one of these "thunderbolts" comes within the range of the earth's atmosphere it is a spectacle to be remembered for a lifetime, Suddenly everything is lighted up by a most brilliant flashing glare, so bright that for a few seconds the stars disappear from view. while overhead a great ball of vivid fire. of a phosphorescent, metallic blue tint. followed by a train of scintillant glowing sparks is seen to be hissing along to-wards the horizon. And now for few moments the spectacle is terrible and sublime, as the flaming pseudo-luminary sweeps across the canopy of the skies; until at length, with a tremendous croshing detonation, the aerolite disappears. probably breaking up into fragments, and either falling into the sea or burying itself in the earth.

To give some idea of the violence of these explosions it is related that some time ago a meteorie stone, observed by Sir Hans Sloane, the great naturalist traversed the whole of England exploding over Devon or Cornwall, the explosion being heard not only through those counties but on the opposite coast of France.

And when the immensity of space is considered, with the unconceivably stupendous infinity of heavenly bodies sus pended therein, from mighty flaming suns of incredible magnitude, to these minute wanderers of the ether, the mind is struck with awe and stupor and amazed bewilderment, at the august and majestie power and selemn omnipotence of Him who created them all. And yet that Mighty Being deigned to resign for a time His Majesty in the beavens and to come down to this earth in humility and penury in order to make an expiation for all who will but lay their sins upon Him. And yet how many fatuously reject that atonement, and callously incur the wrath of that great Creator!-- Be A Banker.

Men Who Are Want :1.

There is a little hymn whie I some. An Estate at Bow Where Dickens Laid times hear people singing. It has this ! One of His Most Famous Scenes. refrain: "Oh. to be nothing, nothing," Now it must surely be more henoring and pleasing to Him who made us strive to be something, something, it is not to be passive, empty, idle mind and heart, the inspiration of God comes. It is not to the passive, empty, idle mind and heart, but to the fully exercised mind and heart, the inspiration of Ged comes. It is a strong, sacred will, and not a weak and broken will. He requires for his purposes. It is our disciplined faculties we must bring to Him if we are to be His fellow-workers. We were not meant to be nonentities, and the ery to be "nothing, nothing," must be the ear of Him who created us in his own image and sent us forth to his work in the world. " " The everlasting God the Lord fainteth not, neither groweth weary, and in this continuous and never-ceasing work of creation man can help or hinder, develop or retand the creative purpose and process. clearly that he is made in the image of the Creator, show that he is a fellowworker with God, and thus does the world point us and testify to the cooperation of God and man in bringing nature and all the products of nature

It doesn't very much matter what kind of work we may do; the supreme hing is the spirit which we bring to our work. To be fellow-workers with God in our daily calling, we must have larger than merely personal aims and needs, we must see that our work, both directly and indirectly, is an influence for good and not an influence for evil, lifting and not a debasing and groping influence, a help and not a hindrance to the giving of a better civilization and a better society, doing something to es tablish justice and truth and goodness in the world, and to get God's will done on earth as it is in heaven .- Rev. John Hunter, D. D. "We are fellow-workers with God."-I.

MRS. NICKLEBY'S GARDEN.

Many interesting associations are linked with the Grove Hall estate, at Bow, which is to come under the auctioneer's hammer to-day. It was here that Chas. Dickens lai dthe scheme of the amusing love making episodes between Mrs. Nicholas Nickleby and the "gentleman belonging to the house next door." Here stood the "little cottage at Bow," and the quaint old garden in which Mrs. Nickleby and her daughter Kate received the love offerings of vegetable marrows, cucumbers and onions, is still in exist-

Until recently the estate was the site of Byas' private lunatic asylum. Just off the Bo wroad-the high road to Chigwell, with which the novelist was well acquainted-and about three or four hundred yards down Fairfield road the visitor comes to a large high brick wall. Passing through the narrow porter's lodge, he at once steps into an Old World garden of quaint and singular beauty. In front of him stretches a long avenue of plane trees, and away in the distance are vistas of winding paths and leafy lanes.

It is a strange spot, situated in the heart of London's East End, a spot which few would expect to find in this busy district. At the end of the avenue and away to the left lies the old time garden in which the eccentric lady and her still more eccentric lover communed in the days of long ago. The old wall, thickly covered with ivy and creepers, over which the "gentleman from next door" conversed with Mrs. Nickleby, is still there, much worn with age. 'n the centre of the garden is a large patch of evergreens and marigolds, while sweet smelling jasmine perfumes the air with its gragrance. One can easily reconstruct ned and see in imagination the lady demurely rejecting the proposals of the madman 'from next door." The little cottage has long since been demolished, and on its site now stand the remains of a laundry. But the landif these old associations are allowed to be obliterated by the march of the marks are still left, and it will be a pity builder. It is a delightful sylvian retreat and the many lovers of Dickens will hope that the suggestion of the Dickens Fellowship that the authorities should secure the place as a public recreation ground will be acted upon. The estate, which is etill surrounded by the high wall of Byas' private lunatic asylum, comprises close upon a dozen acre beautifully wooded land. Such a spot would make an ideal recreation ground. The asylum itself was closed early in the present year, and the buildings, with the exception of one or two at the extreme left of the grounds, have been pulled down.-London Daily News.
