Roderick Cochrane Recalls Early Durham.

Mr Robt Cochrane kindly handed us the following reminiscent letter from his brother. It was not meant for publication, but it is just the kind of letter that should be preserved. It will make interesting reading to his friends and to all who value historical allusions to the origin of the place. Mr R. Cochrane informs us that the Bob Turner alluded to used to long to see the world. He enlisted in Toronto, was drafted to Gibraltar and died there.

Worcester, Mass., Nov. 22nd '06
My Dear Bob.

I was disappointed in opening your letter yesterday to find the "Durham Chronicle Special" instead of one of your breezy letters. Let me say right here I did not receive any letter at St. John, N. B. and I wish you to repeat it and send to me here for I want to hear from you.

Next to a letter you could not have sent me anything that has given me more pleasure than the Trade Edition of Durham. First, let me say it is a credit to the publisher in its matter, arrangement, cuts and typography, and should do you town a lot of good. Durham has grown much since I last saw it. I had forgotten that you had anything in the manufactures but the Cement and that is much larger than I supposed. I am glad to see that the Cochranes are still represented in the municipal and business interests. Miss Cochrane in the implement line. Mr. Morlock in the mercantile and yourself, God bless you, in the municipal. Durham without the Cochranes would not be Durham.

Last night when I finished reading the Review, I fell into a meditative vein and my memory carried me back over a long period of time; and I remembered that with the possible exception of your brother-in-law, and any of Archibald Hunter's family that may be living, there is no one alive who knew Durham before I did, and oh! what memories it calls up. February 3rd 1847 mother and I landed at the "Buckhorn." I suppose father was there for he was not with us on the way. You will remember that I was ten years of age and all agree I was mighty small at that. I do not remember any house in Durham but Hunter's. I think it was known as the Saugreen Reservation. It was all woods to the top of the hill. You know I was driver, and where it was necessary to take "Back and Bright" I had to go; and several Journeys father and I made to Dams with five bushels of grist on the ox sleigh in June or other summer months. I remember one occasion we had to stop all night and on the way home we called at, I think Schofield's store which was then near the Rocky, and father asked for cheese. I fancy he might as readily gotten "Durham Portland Cement." No doubt he was put down as "a dude" by the natives, for thanks to his admirable pride, father never left the farm unless he wore a white shirt and starched collar. On that same occasion we called at Hunter's as he wanted a piece for me, my recollection is they did not have any bread in the house, and that was a condition that prevailed in more houses than Hunter's. Two or three years went by then you came, and how glad I was, for there was no boy in the neighborhood to talk to—for we did not know anything about play—but Bob Turner. How often I have recalled Bob Turner and his lame father!

Time sped, and it was decided that I should go to New Sarum to attend school. The morning of the 6th of June found William Mountain, Uncle Hector and myself ready to start to the front with all our possessions tied in handkerchiefs carried on our shoulders on the end of a stick. Father's eyes were pretty moist when he bid me good bye, for you and he were going to a logging bee at McGregor's. The tears coursed down mother's eyes as she kissed her baby good bye and we were off on that long walk to Dundas. On Moffat's hill I took a last look at my home, that never was my home again. In three days we reached Flamboro, where Adam was working, and he had walked every foot of the way. In due time I was on board the steamer in Hamilton for London where we arrived next morning, then the stage to St Thomas, and a walk of 7 miles brought me to New Sarum.

Four years later, an evening in June found me once more at the Buckhorn. Father did not know me but mother who was in bed knew my voice and was up in a minute. Shortly after that you and I were found gathering stones from the neighboring farms to build the Durham Foundry. Later we were quarrying at the Saugreen flat stones to be used as binders for the round ones. My first and only experience in quarrying—you had the oxen and I had a baulky span of horses. Do you remember hitching the chain round my horses' neck and the oxen at the other end, and how for a long time the rattle of a chain would make that horse pull? Summer slipped into fall and the foundry was almost completed when suddenly there was a crash, and the end of the foundry had fallen out and down. It was a dark evening, but it was a darker night in Adam's house for we did not know the extent of the damages or how it was going to be repaired. I waited and worked, drew bricks from Smith's tavern over an endless corduroy and saw the foundry completed, and once more was in New Sarum in time to attend Aunt Bell's wedding in January of 1855.

Pretty Things

Such pretty things as we have for Xmas. No wonder they are drawing the forehanded early buyers. Have you seen them?

From that time the Cochrane family has been each for him and herself—all have made money and all have lost but you. It is a comfort to know that one had sense enough to hold onto what he has.

You and I are like the last rose, or roses, of summer left blooming alone, all our lovely companions are faded and gone. Ifancy you can count on the fingers of one hand all whom you knew sixty years ago. In this count don't include our family for there are still five of ourselves. All this sad remembrance, for it is sad, has been brought about by reading the Durham Chronicle.

I shall send that copy to Haggart in Calcutta, and if I had another I would send it to Rode in Bombay, as they are about the only ones who can appreciate it. Is Uncle Adam's house occupied by Dr Jamieson?

Now I would like to hear from you soon with your reminiscences. Love to all the family.

Ever your affectionate brother,
RODERICK.

CHRISTMAS 1906.

Some Holiday Suggestions

We now have our entire line on display and urge you to call and examine it as early as you can and as often as you choose.

We have an unusually good stock this year—gifts from every clime and quarter. We are certain that the assortment is the most extensive ever seen here. The lines noted in this advertisement give little more than a hint of the array we have provided.

In the matter of price we have a big advantage, too. We bought largely, paid cash and bought for less than others and we give you the same advantage. If low prices on good goods is what you want you will certainly do your holiday shopping here. Please make it a special point to see the stock while it is complete. If you see anything you want to secure it will be laid aside if a small payment is made.

XMAS CANDY

The purest, richest, and most toothsome candies are here—all of the favorite varieties. Some beautiful holly boxes—just the thing to send to your lady friends. 25c per box up.

BIBLES

Always a good gift. We have Oxford Bibles, Teachers', Flexible Cover Bibles, etc. An ample line of prayer books, Hymnals, Books of Devotion, Church goods, etc

LEATHER GOODS

Some new things in this line you will want to see—Vanity Bags, Fifth Bags and a large variety of other new bags, Pocket Books, Purses, Bill Books, Music Rolls, etc. You cannot match our prices.

TOILET ARTICLES

Brushes, Mirrors and Toilet sets—what better gifts? Have them mounted on silver Stag, Ebony and the finest natural woods. Quality is of the best and the prices reasonable on all.

Make a memorandum of those to whom you will send presents. In looking over this or any of our succeeding ads if you get suggestions of gifts suitable for some of those on your list, note them opposite their names, then when you come in to see the goods you can concentrate your attention on the lines you have noted. Try this plan this year.
