

I Thank Thee.

I thank Thee, Lord, for trials sent is is the twig by breezes bent, That firmer clasps the ground I thank Thee for the bitter word That makes Thy voice still plainer heard. A tender, loving sound.

I thank Thee for the tears that wean My soul from earth, and make it clean, Washed in a moulten fire. I thank Thee for Thy staff and rod, Both mercies, in the hand of God. Guiding ever higher.

I thank Thee for the joy I find In sins forgiven, cast behind Thy back, forever more; I thank Thee, for in this I look, By faith, into Thy record book, And read my own name o'er.

I thank thee for the Light and shade Of which this earthly life is made, A secred, holy plan. I thank Thee for the Home above, Eternity of boundless love. Prepared for ransomed man.

Lord, may I ever thankful be. Thy dear, strong arms enfolding me, No will but Thine to know. Then when I meet Thee face to face. Upon my spirit Thou canst trace The lessons learned below. -Alice G. Howard

Hope Through Failure.

No man ever gets higher up than he are the making of a man. And no man | this year. is more to be pitied than he who has realized his ideals. For it has been well said that "a character gets no higiler than its ideals," and if a man has none, or if he has set them so low that he has attained to them, then for him there is nothing ahead; growth has stopped; death has set in. There is encouragement here for those who are tempted to discouragement because they have failed to attain; and there is a warning here for those who are tempted to satisfaction in their attainment. Let us set our ideals so high that it is safely impossible to attain them: and then let us spend life freely in doing the im-

The Victim of the Seas. (By a Banker.)

Itaif buried in sand, its bulwarks mostly torn away, leaving but the massive projecting stanchions, and but the suattered ends of its masts left standing, hes by a furious tempest upon a wild, ironbound coast. Surrounded by jagged, angular masses of rock, which at nigh tide are completely covered by the waters, the ill-fated vessel is stranged almost in the centre of one of those natural inlets hewn out of the solid rock by some terrible convulsion of nature. At the extreme end of the inlet is a dark, lofty cavern penetrating some distance into the rock; its floor at the upper end, after a storm, covered with flotsam and jetsam of the sea; broken spars and fragments of wreckage, or, perhaps some tropical product brought by the Gulf Stream and cost on shore, or the strange horay case or "purse" which formerly was the home of a young doglish. Covering the lofty roof of the cavern, their pendent fronds gracefully hanging down, are numerous handsome specimens of the beautiful sea fern; while scattered about its mouth are several large detached boulders, each standing in a lovely pool tenanted by tiny fish, which dart bither and thither amongst the waving coralline and the dancing tufts of manypued sea plants.

Seaward is the great ocean, its glittering surface now calm and placid save for the great Atlantic rollers, each a mile or more in length, which, as the water shallows, gather in force and beauty until at length with majestic grandeur the rapidly advancing billow curls over, the beauty of its lovely sea-green hue endanced by the snowy whiteness of its seething crest of driven foam, which, advancing against a strong breeze, leaves in its train a sparkling shower of spindrift, over which a striking and beautiful rainbow continues to play until the wave has broken on the sands.

And there, in the midst of all these beautiful surroundings, lies the poor, abandoned derelict, formerly a thing of beauty and grace, now but a melancholy wreck; soon, battered and shattered by the devouring elements, to disappear in

Attracted and deceived by the so-called "new theology." he throws over ms Bible, trying to make himself believe that it is not the Word of God, and that the direct statement therein that the Son of God died on the cross to make atonement for the sins of all who come to Him for life and salvation is a fatuous mistake of the Biblical writers, he makes shipwreck of his faith, and is overcome by the powers of evil. But if, before it is too late, he cries mightily to the Almighty for guidance and for help, he will surely be delivered, and an appalling soul-wreck averted.

THE VALUE OF DOGS.

How the "Friends of Man" Are Now Being Classed in the Eye of the Public. Fashions in the breeds of dogs, like in all things else, undergo changes. That this is a fact is shown in Madison Square

Garden next week. The great Dane is the most popular of the big dogs just now, the entry list for this year being 102, just twice as many as in 1897, while in 1887 there were only six. One of the peculiar features is the entire absence of mastiffs, for the first time in years. The falling off in popularity is by no means a new thing, for ten years ago, only 10 entries were made, as against 37 in 1887, and that number twenty year sago was a good representation, considering the total number of dogs shown, which was far

Since then they have had regular classification, but did not become popular for several years, the number being only 17 ten years ago. This BET year the number has run up to 22. It has Icelanders with Minnesota, Bohemlans with Iowa, and French, Finns and Hollanders with Michigan. THE FUTURE WOMAN.

Views on the Subject by a Distinguished

The woman of the future in order to attain perfection, should improve physically, morally and intellectually. These are the three adverbs which represent the great human trinity, three gods of the soul, the god of felicity, which is itself the result of the perfect equilibrium of all our energies, says Professor Paolo Montegazza, in the Pilgrim. Woman has always been and always her beauty, and we cannot dethrone nor make her walk in new ways, only we ought to develop her beauty by adding to her corporal beautles those of the heart and thought. Physically the woman of the future should be neither feeble nor neurotic. A wise, hygienic regime should render her graceful without transforming her into a sportswoman. Morally the woman of the future should surpass the woman of to-day, as she now surpasses the slave or savage. She and conscience because she will not approach the altar with eyes bandaged by ignorance and hypocrisy. In marriage
