LESSON XIII.—JUNE 30, 1907.

Temperance Lesson.—I Cor. 10: 23-33. Commentary.—In verses 14-22 Paul re-touching the eating of meats which had been offered in sacrifice to idols.

1. The duty of living for others (vs. 23, 24). 2. All things are lawful.—I may lawfully eat all kinds of food, but all are not expedient. It would not be becoming in me to eat of all, because I should be offended and grieve many weak minds.

25. Is sold.—The meats of idol sacrifices were often exposed to sale in the markets, especially by the priests when they had in hand a surplus. To the Christian this was as lawful as any other meat.

27. Id. . . . feast.—This refers to a feast in a private house. In verses 14-22 the apostle severely rebukes the practice of eating at feasts in heathen temples.

There are other things that we should shun as well as alcoholic drinks, which injuriously affect the one using it. It tends to impair the eyesight; it weakens the action of the heart, and tends to break down the nervous system.

There are drugs such as opium and cocaine that have the quality of enslaving those who use them for some time. Because by their use pain is for a time relieved, or there is a feeling of buoyancy, the habit is formed with all its evil results.

As a natural result the purse is uselessly affected. Poverty, follows the trail of the awful traffic. The slave to drink does not regard the value of money, only as it procures what his appetite craves.

It is sad enough that poverty, disease and death result from intemperance, but these are only a part. The family of the drunkard always suffers. The father, the mother, the brother, the sister, the wife, the husband, the son, the daughter are needlessly pained.

a right to interfere with the liberty enjoyed by another, save so far as his own conscience and conscientious convictions are likely to be affected thereby.

31. Eat and drink.—The glory of God is to be the end of all our actions. In themselves eating and drinking are things indifferent, but there are circumstances in which they may be matters of the highest importance.

32. Give none offence.—See R. V. "Though you may be no better or worse for eating meat or not eating, yet if your conduct injures others and leads them into any error, abstain entirely."

By love serve one another (Gal. 5, 13). William Scott, the Vermont boy, the sleeping sentinel, saved by Lincoln from being shot, told the story thus: "Mr. Lincoln was very gentle. He said, 'You are not going to be shot to-morrow. I am going to trust you and send you back to your regiment. I have come from Washington, and I want to know if you are going to pay my bill.' There was a big lump in my throat, I could scarcely speak. But I managed to say, 'There is the bounty in the savings bank.'"

Alcohol is the curse of the world. It has taken the glow of health from the cheek and placed there the hue of the wine-cup! taken the luster from the eye and made it dim and bloodshot; taken vitality from the blood and filled it with seeds of disease and death; entered the brain, the temple of thought, destroyed reason and made it reel with folly; taken intelligence from the eye and exchanged it for the stupid stare of idiocy.

Alcohol dulls the sensibilities and changes love to enmity. A reporter tells of the most revolting sight he ever saw: a child being too intoxicated to stand,—over an autumn saloon—a father giving his three-year-old child liquor. The child frequently reeled and fell. It had a drunken leer on its face like that of a common inebriate.

Take heed, rumrunner, lest by any means this liberty of yours, given by the vices of a Christian (?) people, become a stumbling block to them that are weak. A child lay dying. Her father had struck her a blow on the spine while insane from the influence of rum.
