Gambling.

By Rev. Wm. Farquharson. Whether gambling is increasing as rapidly as many assert or not, there is no question of its being very prevalent. It has secured a footing in almost every circle of human interest. For long it has possessed the turf, and it threatens in like manner to degrade every form of sport. It has invaded the civic and political domain so that the prospect of a presidential election, or the fate of a government is rated by the odds that are staked on the issue. It is even working its way into social life, and its presence is marked in the forms of common speech and in the circumstances I ask for space in your columns, briefly to discuss. What is gambling, what leads up to it and how it may be checked.

What then is gambling? In general it may be said to be gaming for money yet all gaming for money is not strictly speaking gambling. Races are run and feasts of skill accomplished for the incentive of a prize, which cannot be classed as gambling, although in cases where the prizes are made up of the money paid for entering on the contest it approaches that form of gambling where the money is pooled and the possession of it determined by the race or game. In any case if the prizes are made so large as to induce a class of people to enter on the game as a professional means of making gain, the results will be scarcely less injurious than where money is lost or won by definite gambling. It may indeed be questioned, whether games are ever on a real, healthy footing, where more encouragement is needed than the floral wreath for which the young man of ancient Greece used so manfully to contend.

The specific character of gambling then is the staking of money on a game of hazard, or of hazard and skill combined, in the hope of making gain. There are many forms in which it is practiced, but the most common are the lottery and betting on any side. It is evident in speculations in land and grain, in stocks and bonds. Some of these transactions may be carried on in ways that are honorable, but many of them would more properly be classed as gambling. So long as this kind of speculation is popular so long will the passion be fed that leads up to the gambling table.

The other passion that leads to gambling is the mad craving for excitement. Chambers in his Encyclopaedia analysis this passion in the following judicious sentence: "In general it (gambling) is resorted to as a refuge against the depressing sensations of languor and vacancy, which the want of active exertion causes in those who have no inner life. The root of gambling is the root of gambling. The vacant mind demands excitement to produce which at every step the stimulant has to be increased. Thus as the game palliates there has to be added the lash in the form of a money stake. This in turn has to be increased in amount till reckless of every thing, a man will stake his all, and his very life, in a word to gratify the excitement of the moment.

If these are the master passions which feed the voracious gambling habit, the question comes, in how far are they stimulated by the practice of playing cards, pool, billiards or other games or practice with which the gambling habit is connected? It is evident that skill in any of these does not directly produce gambling, but the question is in how far do they feed the passion for gain or the passion for excitement which leads to gambling. If Chambers is right in saying that gambling is resorted to as a relief from the sensation of languor in those who have no inner life it follows that any game that absorbs the interest, and takes up any large part of the time which is given to feed the inner life will leave a hungering which it has nothing to satisfy. It is this constant stimulating of the passion for excitement, without stirring the inner life, that is the greatest danger of all this class of games to which I have referred.

It will be asked in how far this danger is obviated by substituting for cards or billiards such games as Nations, Lost Her, Flinch, Logomachia, or any of the myriad forms of amusement that the ingenuity of dealers has devised. If, as many claim, that some at least of these are the old game of cards in a new dress, then whatever danger lurks in the game played by spades and clubs will still be found in the same game though arrayed in more modern apparel; even if, as others claim, there is an essential difference between the passion stirred by these and that awakened by cards and others of a like order, it will scarcely be held that the mental food which these can supply will go far to awaken the mind or soul within. So long as that is the case if much time is devoted to the best of them, the rest will be much the same as in the absorption of the mind in the much condemned cards. If a temporary excitement is produced without any stirring of the inner life the tendency will ever be to keep up this superficial excitement by ever increased stimulation. Thus for the kid glove games will come the craving for plain spades and clubs, and from these again the weary spirit will turn to the same old excitement in the form of gambling only to find that all such excitement instead of being bread for man is but husks for the swine. The ill is deeper rooted than can be cured by a mere change in the form of the game.

Is $15 your price for a Spring Suit?

Then we should like to burn into your brain the fact that for $15 you can get all the style and as perfect a fit as can be put into a suit—as much as if you paid $28. Of course the cloth is not so fine, nor the trimmings so luxurious, but every other way the $15 suit is identical with the highest cost clothing.

How then is the ill to be cured? Call in the help of law and break up the gambling resorts? All that may be very well, but for the poor soul seeking for a satisfaction which continually flees as he approaches, law comes too late. He is ruined ere it reach him and then it may punish, but it cannot save.

Lift up your voice like a trumpet and cry out against the lax moral sense that as speculating or gambling takes money without giving an honest equivalent. All this is very well but there is still the soul that in its emptiness craves for satisfaction.

What then is the cure? If you would root out the spirit of gambling, you must stir the soul and open its inner springs. To this end all that gives culture in art or literature, all that leads out of narrow selfishness to a real care for the welfare of others, all that awakens man to his true mission will give a healthy satisfaction to the inner craving and help to quench the soul's burning thirst. No better direction to this end was ever given than that of the apostle: "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honorable, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue and if there be any praise, think on these things."

The School For The Blind At Brantford.

To the Editor of The Review.

Dear Sir,—I ask your assistance to enable me to get into communication with the parents or guardians of all the blind children in Ontario, under the age of twenty-one years. The Institution for the Education and the Instruction for the Blind, maintained by the Ontario Legislature, admits as pupils "all blind youths, of both sexes, between the ages of seven and twenty-one, not being deficient in intellect, and free from disease or physical infirmity, being residents of the Province of Ontario." It is not necessary that the applicant shall be totally blind; the test is inability to "read ordinary type and attend a school for the seeing, without serious injury to the sight." The initial difficulty is to locate the children who are eligible for admission, and it will be helpful in the future if your readers will send me the names and addresses of blind children under seven, as well as of those between seven and twenty-one. Should you favor me by the publication of this letter, I would ask your readers not to depend upon the parents of the children with defective sight to attend to this matter. If all could witness the gain in health, happiness, knowledge and self-reliance that comes to those who, deprived by their affliction of access to the public schools, take advantage of the educational facilities afforded by this Institution, none would grudge the time and trouble required to widen the scope of the school's influence. Send me the names and addresses, and I will by correspondence or visitation do the rest.
