Murder, Pillage and Fire Raged in Casa Blanca After the Bombardment.

French Newspapers Realize the Magnitude of the Job Before France.

Paris, Aug. 12.—Special despatches received here from Tangier represent the situation as being more alarming on the coast and in the interior. Said Sale, the administrator of customs at Babat, is said to be openly preaching a holy war among Mussulmans, as the result of which the French Consul has distributed arms to the Europeans. In addition, a fanatical priest named Maclain, at the head of a horde of followers, is travelling through the littoral inflaming the anti-foreign sentiment.

Reports from Fez say that the advisers of the Sultan are terrified and have not yet informed His Majesty of the gravity of the situation. Up to this evening the Foreign Office here had no confirmation of the reported bombardment of Mazagan.

The Bombardment.
London, Aug. 12.—A long and vivid description of the bombardment of Casa Blanca and associated incidents is printed in the Daily Mail, whose correspondent was apparently the only English newspaper man there. He makes it clear what is not surprising, that it was hopeless residents of the town, and not the tribesmen who committed the massacre of July 30, who were the main sufferers from the Franco-Spanish operations. With the firing of the first shot, the correspondent says, Governor Anis' authority vanished. His soldiers bolted with their rifles, leaving the town exposed to pillage and murder. They and the fiercest tribesmen rushed their and thither looting houses and shops, staggering under their burdens of plunder.

From the British Consulate, where the correspondent stayed, were heard the shrieking and wailing of Jews who were being beaten and murdered by Arabs. The increasing number of the latter showed that, attracted by the looting, they were flocking to the town, to fulfill the dream of an Arab's life, to loot a town. The fierce barbarians, maddened with the lust of help and gain, were losing on the timid, helpless and unresisting population.

Continuing, the writer says: "The horrors that occurred in that part of the town which the French and Spanish rifles did not cover will never be told. I hope I never shall know them. I saw from the balcony of a house Jews being beaten and shot and their houses being emptied by the Arab looting. I saw Moorish women dragged squealing from their houses. People who know how to decline to speak or think of the horrors of the town to which the town was subjected."

Needless Precipitancy.
The correspondent, while admitting that the French army, as yet, has learned, and while making no direct accusations, nevertheless implies that there was at least needless precipitancy in the French action. The Governor had employed his soldiers to guard the town from Arab attack, manning the walls, guarding the gates, and patrolling the neighborhood of the big English stores. Perfect order was kept within the town. The Governor, indeed, did conscientiously all he could to secure the town's safety.

After describing the landing of the French detachment and the preceding incidents, the correspondent says: "Immediately the French rifles were fired ashore, the French troops, for which she was waiting, opened a furious cannonade and not until then did the Governor and soldiers take a hurried flight to a poor residence where they were able to make the Moorish fire was silenced in twenty minutes, but the Galilee began re-shooting."

The despatch is somewhat vague, but it implies that the Governor's surrender and appeal to the French ceased to get the bombardment stopped was temporarily successful, but the shelling began again for reasons not stated.

It seems according to the story told by the correspondent that if the French had waited for the other ships to join the Galilee and landed an imposing force the slaughter and rapine would have been less. For he says: "Ever since the Galilee's arrival the British and other residents with large interest at stake, and with great knowledge of the people, had impressed upon the French authorities the extreme desirability of avoiding any premature action with an insufficient force."

Was It a Bungler?
This view with some difficulty the French had been brought to accept. It was understood that nothing would be done until more ships arrived and were able to land enough men to take immediate and complete possession of the town and replace the Governor's police arrangements, which had hitherto been so successful in the preservation of life and property from the Arabs.

"Even the night before, in announcing the intention to occupy the town in the morning, the French apparently believed that the fleet would arrive in the meantime, and that it would be able to land an imposing force and resistance need not be expected."

"As it afterwards appeared, the Governor had declared his willingness to surrender possession of the town, if having been represented to him that resistance would be futile. Whether the resistance actually offered was the result of some blunder or of individual action by a subordinate, or whether it was considered that 500 men could be safely resisted, we must wait to learn."

The correspondent tells the following incident: An elderly American, Captain Cobb, who had been for many years a resident of the town, was invited by the British Consul early in the morning prior to the French landing, to come to the Consulate for safety. Captain Cobb declined, saying that only a few Arabs would be shot, and that he would serve them right. The Consul thereupon sent the Legation guard to protect Captain Cobb's house, keeping only two servants for his own protection.

In another instance a young woman who saw an attempted attack on a child captured the man and in spite of his blows and struggles held him until the police arrived.

MURDERED AND BODY BURNED; HORRIBLE FATE OF A MUSICIAN.

Men Discover the Charred Bones on a Pile of Railroad Ties.

Buffalo, Aug. 9.—Chief of Police Bolton, of Lyndonville, Orleans County, last night notified police headquarters that a man had been murdered near that village. Chief Bolton said that the man apparently had been murdered by the tramps, and that to hide their crime the murderers had placed the body on a pile of railroad ties and set them ablaze. The remains are unrecognizable. Robbery is believed to have been the motive of the murder.

Beside the railroad track on which the charred remains were found were picked up a clasp ring, a pair of spectacles and a card bearing the name "F. A. Goodway," and the address "284 Carolina street, Buffalo, N.Y." It was thought by the Lyndonville authorities that the murdered man might be F. A. Goodway, of this city.

The local police last night ascertained that the murdered man, apparently, is F. A. Goodway, who resides at 284 Carolina street, this city, and it was his calling card which was found at Lyndonville. Scofield, Mrs. Goodway stated last night, was a musician and travelled a good deal in small towns. He visited her here two weeks ago. He then had little money, and she was going to make his way down the State as best he could. He took her card that he might have her address when he wrote to her. Mrs. Goodway resides with her

The tank, which was perched on the top of the five-story building occupied by the firm's wholesale clothing and furnishing house, fell fortunately into the alley at the back of the building, and now all that is left to show where it stood is a gaping hole in the side of the top storey, where the wall and roof were torn away as though they were matchwood.

REFRIGERATOR STOCKED WITH PROVISIONS IN LAKE NEAR KINGSTON.

Kingston, Aug. 8.—James G. Minnes made a curious find in the lake frothing his summer residence at the front road. He saw an object floating in the water from Salmon Island, and thinking it was an upturned skiff, went out in his boat to investigate. On coming up to the object he was greatly surprised to find that it was an American refrigerator of latest design. The finder took his prize to the shore, and pulled it out on the beach. His surprise was still greater to find the case well filled with provisions, canned meats, lard and bottles of milk, all in first-class order. Where the refrigerator came from is a mystery.

TRAP-NETS IN THE GULF.

U. S. Fishermen Asked to Apply for Licenses.

Washington, Aug. 12.—The State Department today received a communication from Ambassador Bryce in connection with the seizure and release last spring in the Gulf of St. Lawrence of the American fishing schooner Alert, engaged in trap-net fishing. The Ambassador says that the action of the Canadian authorities in that case was taken solely with a view to the protection of the fisheries, and no question of nationality was involved. In order to prevent further friction, instructions have been sent to the local authorities not to interfere with trap nets by American fishermen, in cases where a license would not be refused to a British fisherman, even though the special license has not already been taken out.

MOST HATED LANDLORD.

Lord Clairicarde Denounces Evicted Tenants Bill.

London, Aug. 12.—After a long and uninteresting debate, in which the leaders of the Opposition indicated their intention of amending the measure in committee, the evicted Irish tenants bill passed its second reading in the House of Lords today.

A dramatic incident of the debate was the appearance of Lord Clairicarde, the most-hated landlord in Ireland, who, with bent and shrunken frame, outstretched, shriveled fingers, and in a voice now shrill, now husky with passion, denounced the bill in unmeasured terms as the "apotheosis of robbery."

In the midst of his diatribe the aged earl occasionally took a phial from his pocket and sipped the contents. Every member of the House turned to watch the speaker, but his speech was received in chilly silence.
