Both Sides Confident.

Toronto despatch: The third day of the strike of telegraph operators employed in Toronto by the Great Northwestern Company closed with both sides confident, and each claiming to be absojutely satisfied with the trend of events, Both the company and their employees appeared to be settling down for a struggle that might last for weeks. The intimation that the company would only pay the employees for July yesterday atternoon, the regular monthly pay day, was received with some delight by the strikers, they believing that the company had not yet come to a final decision not to meet them in conference and consider them discharged. There has been no disorder during the strike, the To be Appointed Vice-General of men having decided not to interfere with the company doing business in any way they may see fit.
