"Christ's Life and His Teachings.

The facts of Christ's life are recount ed in the Gospels with as much care ful detail as are the words He spoke. Some of these facts are of such nature that they are to be accepted or rejected along with His teachings. Many of these lessons are well nigh meaningless unless it is true as represented that they sprang out of some miracle He wrought or deed of benevolence He performed. If all that Jesus claimed for Himself is true there is no reason for rejecting any account of what He did or endured. Even those who sought to entrap Him came back and reported "Never man spake like this man." Why then shall we not expect Him to do as never man did? His lips were not more divine than His hands. Let it be granted that His words are more important than His miracles since His words are to make a universal appeal that His miracles cannot. Still the credibility of a record is not dependent upon the relative importance of the thing recorded. Those who have found it in their hearts to discredit Christ's miracles, have found it easy also to raise the question whethed or not Jesus said the things attributed to Him in the Gospels. We must accord Him as hight a place in His actions as we grant Him in His speech-Central Saptist.

Strength Never a Barrier.

Strength of conviction is never a barwier between two persons. It is often mistakenly supposed to be so. Two men agree, to work together for a common cause; little by little they find it difficult to co-operate on certain details of the work, as both have positive and differing convictions; finally one or the other decides that he will have to abandon the attempt at co-operation, though the eause is in every way admirable And he complacently accepts, as the necessity for this abandoning of a good cause, the fact that he is such a strong man and has such strong convictions! He may be a strong man, but he misses the weakness, not his strength, that separ- | BEER* IS A FOOD ates him from a man with whom he ought to be a coworker. QUEER MISHAPS TO SOME TRAINS.

There are actual happenings in railreading than the wildest dreams of any writer of fiction," said a railroad man, and he proceedon the New Haven Railroad. William Del-lert, now traveling engineer on the New York division of the road, was the engineer. When the train reached Stamford the car inspectors examined the cars and in the middle of the train saw a sight that caused them to start back in amazement. The forward truck of one of the box cars was missing and the only thing holding that end of the car up was Engineer Charles M. Clark, formerly on the Connelleville division of the Baltimore from time to time, the head of a tiny and Ohio Railroad, had an experience some-what similar. He was firing a Grant engine, with three large driving wheels on each side, the middle wheel being without a flange. They had passed Glenece and were mounting the grade when they were flagged and had twisted off its axle flush with the outside of the journal box, but the massive ing at a slight angle of the side rod, which was the only support holding it on the rail. It was evident that in this condition the loose driver had been running along the track at the end of which they were. It was thought that the wheel was twisted from its axle as the engine rounded a sharp curve about two miles below, and it was pretty certain that it would have jumped the track and fallen in the way of the hind driving wheel as soon as the engine started to go around the very next curve. That this did not happen was due to the accident of the train being flagged. The engine ran along all right until the train was completely dead and had to be hauled to the end of the division.

One night a long freight train broke in two as it was coming around a sharp curve on the Erie road between Buffalo and Corning. N. Y. The engineer put on full speed and ran away from the hind section in order to give the conductor and brakemen on the rear end a chance to stop their section. This they succeeded in doing in a quarter of a mile or so, and then the engineer backed the forward section, coupled on to the rear section and proceeded to Corning, the end of the

The figures increase from curve on which the freight train had broken It was supposed that when the rear section of the broken train started to round the curvo this car had jumped the rails, broken the coupling holding it to the car behind, and cleared twenty or thirty feet down the bank before striking the ground which, at this point was covered with underbrush, and that this underbrush, after the car had rolled past, had righted itself and given indication of having been disturbed. Almost the same kind of accident happened on the New Haven road some years ago, when two freight cars jumped from the rails of a parted train, and their loss was not discovered until the new conductor at the next division point took an inventory of the cars. But in this instance the truant cars were located in a few hours, being in full view. An odd accident took place on the Jersey Central road that was full of possibilities in the way of a wreck. An empty locomotive was going toward Jersey City running backward. When running thus an engine is particularly likely to be thrown from the track for the light tender wheels usually mount the slightest obstruction. The engine ran

As practically all the departments have a corresponding item it remains for some Congreseman, looking for novelty, to propose a bill for erecting a general stable. The President tried in vain to have the old White House stables replaced by new, so Uncle Sam too may have to wait. The Treasury Department has so overflowed the fine old granite building next to the White House that it has to rent six oth-
