Wealthy Retired Merchant of New York Commits Suicide Because of Failing TOWN FIRED Eyesight-Engaged in Chinese Trade.

New York, Jan. 6 .- Surrounded by the paintings which he loved, but which he knew were to be soon nothing but memories because of his fast failing eyesight. Marquis Cossit Caspar, a wealthy retired tea merchant and octogenarian, shot himself this morning in the sitting room of his house at 30 West 53rd street. dying instantly. He was found some time later by his wife, who at first thought him asleep.

Mr. Caspar, whose age Coroner Harburger got as 85, was once a member of the firm of Howland & Espinwall, whose offices were at 54 South street. They owned many fast clipper ships and did large business in bringing tea from China. Twenty years ago Mr. Caspar retired with a fortune. Since then he had lived a life of ease, devoting himself to his hobbies, which were driving and painting water colors. Recently the old man's eyesight began to fail very fast, and about two weeks ago his physician told him that he had cataracts. In addition to this, the circulation in his eyeballs was defective. Apparently Mr. Caspar realized that there was no hope for his eyesight and, according to the family, had become despondent. A few days before his death he remarked to his physician that the end seemed pretty near when a man lost his eyesight. Not only was it impossible for him to read, but the pleasure he once had of retouching some of his water colors was also lost to him.

Mrs. Caspar paused at the door once and looked in, but seeing her husband still reclining in the chair, she supposed him asleep. A short time afterward she took in a canary to hang in the room. because she thought the singing of the bird would cheer him up. Passing around to the other side of his chair she saw the bullet hole in his right temple, from which the blood was trickling, and realized what had happened. She called one of the servants and sent for her physician. The latter said that Mr. Caspar
