He repaired one night to the country house where the elder Romanoff lived, and was let in by the son, who hid him in an attic, awaiting a propitious moment for carrying out their design. After a week's waiting, some guests having been sent away from the house by a strategem, Rataschievitch armed himself with a hammer, and, assisted by his friend, cantiously entered the old man's bedroom and battered his head in. Having thus accomplished his crime and collected some valuables, Rataschievitch fled to Roumania, while the parricide, Romanoff, embarked for America.

dead!" and fell over on the floor. She was up again in a minute and the doctors saw that the shock had affected her mind. Grabbing a hatpin from her had, she made a swift jab at her throat and succeeded in inflicting an ugly gash. The doctors seized and disarmed her, but she broke away, and picked up a bottle of bichloride of mercury that was standing with other bottles on a table and raised it to her lips

Again the doctors fell upon her and knocked the bottle from her hand. Then she was seized and held down, She was sleeping peacefully at a late hour last night, but it is feared that when she awakes she will still be Johnson, the driver of the wagon,
