

Nothing Lost.

(J. W. Foley, jun., in Bismarck Tribune.) Not every glistening pearl of dew Like rich set jewel, finds a rest Upon a rose, or, nestling down, Shriaks, modest, on its velvet breast Not every songster's swelling throat Pours forth its wealth of song to bless Our ears, but countless earols float Unbeard in the deep wilderness.

Not every arrow finds its mark, But, sped all eager from the now, Too deffly feathered, floats too high, Too lightly driven, falls below. Not every effort finds success. But fails, as falls the arener's dart, Not every stabeam gilds the gloom, Nor every song may reach the heart.

Yet, though I fail, mine effort lives, And somewhere on a seroll engrossed The glory of my striving is, For nothing fruitless, nothing lost That like a seed sown of the soul, May fall and die in desert not,

But would have blossomed and borne

If fallen in some fertile spot.

A Marked Contrast.

How mighty is God and how helpless is man! Before the Infinite the might iest human power dwindles into nothingness. When God arises to shake the earth, how impotent man! With all his greatness of inteleet, with all his wonderful grasp or the forces of nature, he stands as one in paralysis before the almightiness of God. He hurls the sea against coastwise cities, and their great ashler walls are crushed as eggshells. He makes the billows clap their hands and in the impact great ships are crushed like glass in the tempest. Es sends the eyelone across the fields and nothing ean stand before it. Villages are but playthings in his path, and the centuryold monarchs of the forest are overthrown. When he sends his tidal wave against the beaches of the seas, men made in the image of God, with dominion over earth and sea, are drowned like rats in their dwellings and all the greatness of their hands is as dust in the whirlwind or turned into a dwelling place for fishes and slimy things, When the trumpeting of the volcano is heard, and God calls from the depths of the earth in fire and ashes and lavaslime, burying rich orchards, vineyards, homes and cities beneath rivers of molten rock, one might well cry out, "Lord what is man that thou art mindful of | feet and represents one of the boldest him!"-United Presbyterian,

Fare. Jenah went down to Joppa and took ship for Tarshish. He paid the fair, doubtless the money was his own, lawfully gotten. But it proved a snare, as it often does now. Had his pocket been empty. Nineveh might have heard her evangel a little earlier and in a better fashion. Oh the inspiration of an empty pocket! "When I sent you out without purse or serip, lacked ye anything? they say unto him nothing." Faith is easy when the cupboard is full, but the true mission of faith is in the face of an empty cupboard. Who is tired of studying the power of money, and reaching after the prize! Oh, fever that has secrebed and cursed the world! The Pope gave the western world to the king of Spain, from the north pole to Cape Horn, Generous man, but not wise. Vaunting ambition doth o'erleap itself. Gold is yellow, and yellow predominates in the Spanish flag; hateful color, emblem of contagious disease, corruption and death. Let us be thankful that the Stars and Stripes contains no yellow, nor the Union Jack. "Three cheers for the red, white and blue." Spain, through pride and p pery and gold has gone down to the lowest. Low in purse and reverance. Her flag has been hauled prestige, and none so poor as do her Italian Government will carry this doudelight. In the most lasting nation there is a splendid postal service, and telegrams and telephones are excelled. Here we find first and second-class matter. The work represented by gold is rated second class. The highest service, that which cannot be paid for in gold, is rated first-class. He who was born in another man's stable, and buried in another man's grave, and was sustained in public ministry by alms, is the king of this nation. The coin of his realm is stamped with a nobler image and super scription than that of Caesar, Let mildecrived, for the loudest laugh of hell lionaires take care that they be not is the pride of dying rich.
