The Jewish World

The right of a hotel to exclude Jews was passed on recently in a decision handed down by Judge Wanhope Lynn in the Municipal Court, New York, in the case of Watson against Abbott. A peculiar feature of the case was that none of the persons directly interested in its outcome was a Jew, that all the lawyers who argued the matter were Christians with the exception of one, who was arrayed against the Jews and that the Judge, who decided it was un-American to exclude a man from a hotel because of his race or creed, was a Ro man Catholic

Hard Times in Germany. (Montreal Witness.) Much has been said of the tremendous strides Germany had made in technical education, manufacturing and commerce, during recent years. English writers have shown how in many lines the products of German mills and looms have supplanted those of the United Kingdom in neutral markets and even in the British market at home. During this period of prosperity population increased dustrial expansion. Since the war with France, Germany has been transformed from an agricultural and military into a manufacturing and commercial nation, the process causing a transfer of population, as in England, from the rural districts to the great city centres of industry. Everything went well so long as markets could be found for German goods and the cost of living was cheaper than in the countries with which Germany competed. But a change was sure of steam. to come, as the Kaiser foresaw and endeavored to provide against by his efforts to establish colonies, create mercantile marine and its natural complement an efficient navy. Having adopted the protective system, and being hedged about by nations with tariffs equally exclusive, Germany soon began to realize her limitations. She was turning out more goods of all kinds than she could sell At the same time the cost of living was advancing and made more costly by the im port duties on foodstuffs from abroad. The result has been that the glut of over-production has been followed by reduction of wages, and the industrial classes in cities lonely homes to-day long for this find they can no longer dispose of their labor
