We had in this country, said Mr. Hughes, grasped the educational side of the school system. Europe had grasped also in many places the vocational side as well. He told how in Bavaria, which has more trade schools than all America, the city of Munich alone possessing 42 such schools, every boy working at a trade has to spend three hours on three days a week in such a school for three years. He pleaded for an equal chance for culture to be given to all children, a culture that would develop the special creative power of each boy and girl, and give culture to all in the way best to develop the selfhood of the individual.
