Che Durham Review

THURSDAY, JULY 9, 1908

GEORGE EULAS FOSTER The Honorable Geo. E. Foster is to speak in Durham on Friday of this week. He will deliver what, from his yfew point will be a very good speech, for he is admittedly one of the best speakers in the House of Commons, the result of a natural "gift oi the gab" and of a very long experience first as a temperance orator and later as a politician. But while our Conservative friends have not asked us for advice or comment in the matter, we doubt the wisdom from the matter, we doubt the wisdom from a party standpoint, of bringing Mr. Foster to this or any riding in the hope of making political capital. While he is, as we have said, a good speaker, he allows himself great liberty of speech in making his charge. liberty of speech in making his charges, giving full vent to his vivid and fertile imagination where he has not facts to substantiate his accusations.

flinging damaging and unwarranted insinuations, not as purely, but as promiscuously and as plentifully as snowflakes. Men now listen to him and are pleased, as they listen and are pleased with the utterances of a phonograph, without bothering to try o separate the fiction from the truth. He has lost his grip and has now no weight or influence. For instance in the somewhat recent bye elections in nearly every place where he spoke the Liberal majority was increased. The very extravagance of his speeches, which would do greater credit to a novelist than to a states-of his reputation is further due to certain acts of his own public life Mr. Foster has never regained the confidence of even the most ardent members of his own party since his belt "in 1896 when, in a manner not to his credit, he deserted Sir Mackenzie Bowell, the then leader of the Conservative party and premier of

I may add, however, that if I did use them I was justified in doing so, and if I did not use them I ought to have done so; and so that there may be no mistake about it, I use them now, in the fullest sense of the term, and shall I believe satisfy the most credulous before I conclude, that I am justified in doing so." Further on in the speech these werds as to Mr Foster occur; "I have also given sufficient evidence to prove that he was the chief of the 'nest of traitors.'

There I propose to leave him to the state of the content of the interval of the inter man, accounts for this in some measure. The feather weight character ate one day, of that nasty episode in Mr Foster's checkered career, Sir Mackenzie quoted from a letter of his own addressed by him to certain conservatives in North Toronto, who were anxious to elect Mr. Foster in that constituency and had solicited Sir Mackenzie's aid. In that letter the Knight said of Mr Foster! "His answers to questions are absolutely untrue," and again; "I am content to let him alone to fight his own batles, but decline further to demean myself by asking my friends to put confidence in him which I do not en-

In the course of his speech Sir Mac-kenzie Bowell said of Mr. Foster and one or more of that gentleman's old time companions; "I have no recollection of using the words 'nest of traitors' at the time which is referred and by the biting, scathing and con-vincing speech of the Minister of Justice of the manner in which the same

And every one who can remember reading Sir Mackenzie and remember reading Sir Mackenzie's whole speech must conclude that Mr Foster well deserved every knock out blow Sir Mackenzie gave him and from the effect of which he will never recover.

It is little wonder that the people of Canada have tost confidence in Mr. Foster and we are confident that many independent voters and honest Conservatives, will at the next election, vote against Conservative can didates from the very fear that should the Conservative party be placed in power they would probably make him Minister of Finance and one continued to the Conservative party be placed in power they would probably make him Minister of Finance and of the public in the handling of the public in the conservative party be placed in power they would probably make him Minister of Finance and for investment.
