The Editor's letters in the last couple issues of the Review were highly appreciated by its readers, and if it suited many would like him to stay for some time so as to give news from the far west. The Deputy Editor seems to be well up to his business as we see no change in any of the editorials that would lead us to think that the young Editor is not up to his business but on the contrary we are pleased to find the paper well and neatly got up.

This hot and dry weather is hard on roots as we notice a lot of them withering. All signs of rain fail in dry weather.

Some are threshing and the grain in some instances are good but a large quantity of it will be light in weight. Some are ploughing and the ground is like brick in heavy clay.

If some of our bachelors want to set up an offer for a prize to the best looking young lady, maybe they would be apt to captivate one of them for being so liberal.
