Dull Times.

Everybody appears to be under the impression that times are hard, and by thinking so and acting accordingly the supposed financial stringency becomes real. Instead of talking and acting despondent, suppose every person would determine for one month and back this up by a determined effort to promptly pay every little indebtedness possible and thus put in circulation not only the hopeful smile and encouraging word, but a little cash to grease the wheels of business, we believe the unpleasant aspect would diminish to the vanishing point, nobody would be the worse for the effort and all would be better. Begin now, and give it a thirty day trial.
