INTERVIEW WITH KAISER.

Berlin Foreign Office Says the Story Was Correct.

The Emperor Has Been Britain's Friend in Spite of Jealousy.

His Disclosures May Have Disastrous Effect.

A Berlin cable says: In answer to enquiries, the Foreign Office stated today that the Kaiser's conversation, as reported by the London Telegraph, was in all essential points correct.

It was added that the interview was intended as a message to the English people. The Foreign Office officials stated that the interview was held in 1907, when the Kaiser was staying at Highlife Castle, England, with one of the guests, to whose discretion the time of its publication was left.

Kaiser is Annoyed. A London cable says: The interview with the Kaiser by a reputable Englishman who long since passed to private life, which was published in the Telegraph today, has aroused extraordinary interest.

The disclosure of the Franco-Russian proposal for Germany during the Boer War to bring about England's downfall is the chief subject of comment. Fears are even expressed at the effect the publication will have on the Governments of those two countries.

It has been stated that the article is true in its chief features. In the interview the Kaiser was emphatic in declaring that he had been consistently the friend of England.

"What more can I do than I have done?" he asked. "I declared with all the emphasis at my command in my speech at the Guildhall that my heart was set upon peace and that it was one of my dearest wishes to live on the best terms with England. Have I ever been false to my word? Falsehood and prevarication are alien to my nature. My actions ought to speak for themselves, but to those who misinterpret and distort them."

A Personal Insult. "This is a personal insult which I resent to be forever misjudged, to have my repeated offers of friendship to be regarded as a grudge, with jealous, mistrustful eyes taxes my patience severely. I have said time after time that I am a friend of England, and your press, or at least a considerable section of it, bids the people of England to refuse my proffered hand and insinuates that the other hand holds a dagger. How can I convince a nation against its will?"

Complaining again of the difficulty imposed on him by English distrust, His Majesty said: "The prevailing sentiment of large sections of the middle and upper classes of England is not friendly to England. I am, therefore, so to speak, in the minority in my own land, but it is a minority of the best elements, just as it is in England respecting Germany."

The Englishman reminded the Kaiser that not only England, but the whole of Europe viewed with disapproval the present conduct of the German Government at Algiers to Fez and forestalling France and Spain by suggesting the recognition of Sultan Mulai Hafid. The Kaiser made an impatient gesture and exclaimed: "Yes, that is an excellent example of the way German actions are misrepresented," and with vivid directness he defended the aforesaid incidents, as the German Government has already done.

The interviewer reminded the Kaiser that an important and influential section of the German newspapers interpreted these acts very differently and enthusiastically approved of them, because they indicated that Germany was bent upon shaping events in Morocco.
