There are herds of elephants about the slopes of Mount Kilimanjaro, and the Great Rift valley. In British East Afri- that the second and third class tusks are more than two during a season. It is the same regulations prevail in Uganda. In the British Sudan a license is required to shoot any kind of big game, and this is also true of British Central Africa. In German East Africa hunters are charged a few rupees for their elephant shooting licenses, but they must pay a royalty to the government on all the ivory they get. As it it there is considerable profit in the business and in the German colonies a fairly good hunter often makes big money. A single elephant may give tusks worth a thousand dollars and upward, and an old bull may produce three ar four hundred pounds of the choicest ivory.

This African ivory brings the highest prices in the markets. It is superior to any other in the size of the tusks, I have seen some which are nine feet long and there are some which weigh 200 pounds each. The average weight of a tusk is much less than this, and one of a hundred pounds is quite valuable. In India the average tusk does not weigh fifty pounds, but that of the African elephant is much heavier. Many of the tusks are broken when they are brought into the market. The elephants use them for plowing up roots and tearing down trees, and also for fighting their enemies. The average tusk is strong and elastic; but it can be broken, and the ends are sometimes snapped off. Ivory tusks are always sold by weight, and the traders tell me that in buying them of the natives they have to be careful to see that pieces of iron or bits of stone have not been driven into the hollows of the horns to make them weigh more.

Dead ivory comes from animals which have died a natural death, or from tusks which have been gathered by the chiefs of the villages and stored away. Ivory has always been an evidence of wealth in Africa, and some of the petty African kings have piled up ivory as our misers and they are divided up into many nahoard money at home. Medicines of the old fashioned kind will sometimes relieve the symptoms of disease, though they never touch the disease itself-they never cure. Ordinary medicines leave behind them indigestion, constipation and headaches. Purgatives leave those taking them feverish and weakened. On the other hand Dr. Williams' Pink Pills do direct good to the body, the blood and the nerves. the blood. They always do good-they
