Centuries of Balkan Woe.

Long Record of War, Rapine, Oppres sion, Bloodshed.

The Balkan region may be called found in it a treasure of 10,000 pounds Turk in the devastated regions was above all things the land of confusion. weight of gold, equal in value, perhaps, doomed. It is the land of war, the land of rapine, to $2,000,000. Wherever the ors. You had better send it down to the enjoyment of the Greek and Roman | the Greek? civilizations. Some of them swept on, some settled down in the region between the Adriatic and the Black Sea. They tangled up the civilization they found with their own barbaric customs. They created a racial confusion which is still at the bottom of all the other confusions that make up the Balkan problem.

In a writory not much bigger than France there are to be found to-day the distinA survivals of three races going back to primitive times. The Albanian, Rumanian and Greek peoples are lineal descendants of peoples who have held the country since immemorial times.

The Albanians are of the old Illyrian stock. Every one knows who the Greeks are. The Rumanians are nobody quite knows who, but most likely the Thracians of old days with a strong Roman modification, not to speak of various subsequent admixtures.

Mixture indeed is the racial law of the Balkans. Only the Illyrian blood is approximately pure. Even the Greeks of to-day have a large percentage of

The original Bulgars were a Finno-Tartar peaple, akin to the Magyars. But the race has been so nearly asimilated by the Slavic people whom they found in the regions where they settled that the present Bulgarians, despite the name, are far more Slav than Turanian in their characteristics.

Next after the Illyrians, or Altanians, the Serbs are the purest blooded Balkan people. But they are a comparatively recent arrival. They are probably 90 per cent. Slavic. The race has been only slightly modified by the peoples whom they overtheew and intermarried with when they took possession of Servia, Boshia, Herzegovina, Novibazar and Montenegro, where they now make up a majority of the population.

Tangle of Population.

But the racial confusion is not in the blood alone. It is still more remarkable in the matter of location.

For instance, of the 4,000,000 Bulgars who live in the Balkans only about 2,-700,000 live in Bulgaria itself, while the rest inhabit Russia, Rumania, Austria, Mungary and the Turkish provinces, especially Macedonia. On the other hand, the balance of the 4,000,000 population of Bulgaria is made up of Turks, Rumanians, Greeks, Gypsies (52,000 them), Spanish Jews (27,500), Tartars and samples of all the other nationalities

There are to-day 8,000,000 Serbs, but only 2,500,000 of them live in Servia. The rest are scattered over Montenegro, Bosnia, Herzegovina, Novibazar, Croatia, Slavonia, South Hungary, Istria and Dalmatio. In Rumania 92 per cent. of the people are Wallachs—that is, Rumanians -but only half of the Rumanian race being found in Transylvania, which is sian rule; in Servia and in Bulgaria.

The Albanians, or Arnauts-they call themselves Shkipetars, by the way-have kept their territory pretty fice of strangers. They are perhaps the wildest people in the world, and it is said that only Pyrrhus the Great ever conquered them; but besides the 2,000,000 of them inhabiting Albania, the western shore of the Adriatic south of Montenegro, there are 200,000 of them in Greece and 100.

000 in southern Italy. As for Macedonia, to describe the confusion of races is almost impossible. The characteristic fact is the tendency of all the races to flock by themselves. There is mixture in the towns and Incre are a few villages in which Turks, Bulgars and Greeks live together, but for the most part each of these three peoples has its own settlements.

The Religious War.

The tangle of religions is almost equally remarkable. There are the Mohamthere are Christians of the Orthodox Greek Church, whom the Roman Catholies call schismatic, and there are Christians of the other Greek Church, whom the Roman Catholics call orthodox and who are allied to Rome through the hierarchy of the Grecian Kingdom, It may fairly be said that the hatred between the two sects of Christians is often more bitter than that between Christian and Turk. It is a leading if not the leading factor in the Macedonian troubles of to-day, and the unspeakable atrocities which make Macedonia the most distressful country in the world are just as frequently perpetrated by Greek Catholics upon Bulgarian orthodox churchmen or by Bulgarians upon Greek Catholics as by the Mohammedans

Servia's Heroic Period. Servia also has its heroic period. 1050 Michael, its Grand Shupan, was recognized as an independent sovereign by Pope Gregory VII. Its power reached a climax between 1331 and 1335, when Stephen Dushan called himself the Emperor of the Rumelians and ruled over a territory which embraced Bosnia, Albania, Macedonia, Theasaly, part of Bulgaria and Greece as far as the Isthmus

Turkish Conquest. The overthrow of Servia was finally completed by the Sultan Mohammed II. who, having taken Constantinople in 1453, devoted his attention to the Balkan region. From this time until the beginning of the nineteenth century Servia had practically no history, but an offshoot from its people kept up light against the Turks unceasingly and without ever being overcome. After the battle of Kossovo, in 1389, band of refugees under one Ivo, the black, took possession of the rugged mountain tract just above Cattaro, on the Adriatic shores. The region was named Tzarnagora, or the Black Mountain, the Montenegro of to-day.

The Great Awakening. It is a singular circumstance that the awakening against the Turkish domination which lasted for nearly 350 years after the conquest showed itself in several regions about the same time. Just at the period when Alexander Ypsilante was putting an end to Turkish misrule in the country which is now Rumania, the Greeks were starting that heroic struggle for independence in which Lord Byron played a picturesque part.
