The striking of more than a million cent pieces at the San Francisco mint in 1908 made a new record in the history of the United States mint and its branches, for never before since the coinage of pieces of this denomination was begun, in 1793, had such coins been struck anywhere but at the parent establishment at Philadelphia,

As a matter of fact, no need for the making of coins of this denomination in the west presented itself until within recent years, as the demand for cent pieces was confined almost exclusively to the Atlantic and middle western States. In the west and southwest this minor coin has had no purchasing value, was not recognized and was seldom seen in circulation. Indeed, even at the present time there are many western localities in which cent pieces are not by theft every year," said a man on the detective staff of a large local store. "For this reason the management is continually spending large amounts to check this leakage, which seems to spring from every possible source. The detective staff has to be changed or modified every few months for several reasons. For one thing, the professional shoplifter who carries away in concealment every day considerable quantities of goods learns to spy out a detective very quickly.

"For another thing, the petty pilferer who steals because she wants more than she can afford, or the genuine kleptomaniac, are all equally clever in spotting a detective. The clerks naturally soon learn the store detectives.
