An air of expectancy all the afternoon was evident, as rumors had gone around that the militia had been called out, but it was not until after 8 o'clock that they put in an appearance. They were lined up on Me-Tavish street from the freight shed crossing, facing both sides of the street, front and rear, and then from a box Mayor Peltier harangued the crowd, explaining that it was owing to them having disregarded his advice and efforts to make a settlement which had made necessary the calling out of the soldiers. He trusted that they would | ing good progress. be quiet and orderly, and that there would be no further shooting. This was interpreted in various languages, the soldiers standing with fixed bayonets, presenting a line of cold steel which looked very formidable.

The Mayor also urged the men to return to work, and all might be satisfactorily settled, and this was translated into the various tongues. The people greeted his remarks with cheers, and then his worship returned to the city hall. The police then cleared the street of all spectators, and the soldiers were left in possession of the field, Groups remained in front of houses. but by 9.30 p. m. everything was quiet. tem is in effect about the docks to-BEGINNING OF THE TROUBLE.
