1859 -- As Things Were

Fifty years ago the trade of this Town was done at the junction of Garafraxa Street and the Durham Road known as Hunters' Corner. Then the streets in the winter would be lined with oxen and sleighs loaded with dressed hogs and grains.

1909 -- As Things Are

Now, the business part of the town is in the Lower Town, the oxen on the streets are a matter of the past, dressed hogs are never offered for sale; what was a busy market is now a rural scene and it reminds one of "Sweet Auburn, loveliest Village of the Plain," and the credit system has now almost passed away, the Cash System taking its place.

1959 -- As Things May Be

Fifty years from now, some Durham boy of to-day, then past middle age, on arriving from a foreign country recognizes Durham boys. They invite him on the street car going north to the Air-ship Dock, now at Hunter's corner, again a business-centre and on the Royal Mail Airship Route, Vancouver to Liverpool. The airship "Canada" arrives just then under the capable command of Captain Irwin, son of the intrepid Frank, and he informs the "old boys" that the "Canada" covers fully 1200 miles per day and they use for power the electricity in the atmosphere. As it is in travel so it is in merchandising: The quicker we can sell goods and in the larger quantities, the cheaper we can sell them and our aim will be in the future as in the past to buy rightly so that we may sell rightly
