Halloween falling on Sunday little or no pranks were done, but perhaps this Monday night will be kept instead. In this town some torty years ago a new waggon was placed on top of one of the highest stables in town all put together with box and all fitted ready for the owner to hitch on his team, but to his snrprise he was in a fix how to get it down from its lofty place and probably was a harder task to get it down without injury than it was to put it up. An-other of the evils of Halloween was committed on one of the residents in the neighborhood, probably farther back than the one mentioned already and to make the matter worse it was done by some of the opposite sex, namely, stuffing up the old fashioned chimney of the farmer, thoughtless of having anything done to cause him to use more language than was necessary for him to express in his morning prayer. He was lighting the morning fire, and, in surprise, he let vent to an overflow of ungramatical language, when the chimney would not draw and the house be-came dense with smoke, and on looking around to see what was the matter he spied a big bundle of pea straw stuck tight into the chimney, Being a good natured highlander the words "Mathair Prisal cho rin so" or "Good Father who did this?" It was fine fun for those doing the act but not to the injured one. We heard another story of some

Halloween pranks which crowns all his waggon the evening previous to his going to town to market and placing the waggon and load securey on his barn floor with everything admitted to be Scotland's Greatest in readiness to hitch his team on, by none, he holds the record for all about two or three o'clock in the the principal Highland gatherings and morning so as to get to town before concerts in Scotland, and has a pearnoon. Joe liked the prairie land well only it was getting too cold for him of late to be sitting on a riding plow driving five horses. Joe preferred harder work as well as warmer. He says some of our old neigh-bors who left this vicinity only some 6 or 7 years ago are doing well. Among them is Colin Lamont who hadn't too much of the world's goods after getting there and this year he had 2300 bushels barley, 1100 of wheat, and 800 of oats, with 40 head of cattle and 10 or 12 herses.
