

MRS. PANKHURST'S SENTENCE

Noted Suffrage Turned Pale When She Received Three Years Hard Labor

A despatch from London says: Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, the leader of the militant suffragettes, was on Thursday found guilty and sentenced to three years' penal servitude at the Old Bailey sessions on the charge of inciting persons to commit damage in respect to the bomb explosion at Lloyd George's country house at Walton Heath. The trial had lasted two days and when the judge, Sir Charles Montague Lush, pronounced sentence his speech was received with loud cries of "shame" from the militant suffragettes, who crowded the court. The jury had added a strong recommendation for mercy, and when the judge pronounced sentence the women rose in angry protest.

GERMAN AIRSHIP CAPTURED

Machinery Of Latest Zeppelin Goes Wrong And She Lands In French Parade Ground

A despatch from Lunville, France, says: One of the great German airship cruizers landed on French territory on Thursday, coming down on the military parade ground here at mid-day, while a brigade of French riflemen was drilling. It was seized by the French authorities. Six German officers alighted from the gondola, and explained to Brigadier-General Antli de Leon Lesot, who galloped up, that the motor of the airship had developed a defect. The ranking German officer said they had departed from Friederichshafen, on Lake Constance, at 6.40 o'clock Thursday morning, and had lost their way in the clouds. The news of the descent of the German military dirigible was telegraphed to the Minister of War at Paris, and Eugene Etienne, the Minister of War ordered it to be seized.

In a little book by Woods Hutchison on "Exercise and Health," there is the following passage: "The 'business,' so to speak, of exercise for the brain worker or indoor man or woman is to pump the blood through the tired brain and little-used muscles, wash out their waste products, burn up clean the skin and the kidneys." The author goes on to say that the only plan to get rid of the waste poisons in the open air and that the "flow of life" is literally the "flow of life as well as of bread."

This is excellent doctrine, much depends upon its application. For a brain worker may attain far too much in the way of physical exercise whether he takes it in gymnasium or in the open air, inspired by the preaching of exercises which has become so popular, when often more than they gain. It has been demonstrated over and over, and the reason for the failure to get the desired results is explained. Given a small reserve of strength, what is needed above all things is rest, the complete relaxation of mind and body. And office work is supplemented with strain on the physical resources, change of occupation does not rest but does increase the demand. Though the exercise may serve as a beneficial substitute, the time can be found for it, resting time to double the demands, one's strength by what is in reality another kind of work is poor policy. It will lead to men running themselves down when they imagine that they are building themselves up.

In all cases, however, fresh air, good medicine, while for a rest, nothing is equal to sound sleep properly induced. It deserves all the eulogies and it is certain that it is to be obtained by becoming tired through exercise, physically and mentally.

A despatch from London indicates that the centenary of the birth of the observed with fitting solemnity this year in that country fashion. The high hat was worn about half a century before but it wasn't native in London; it made its way rather slowly, obvious reasons, the ostentatiousness was the bagwig, which served so excellently as a base for the cocked hat of romance but which a silk hat would have found decidedly precarious resting place.

However ceremonial and still silk may look to us today, oughtn't to forget that it came with democracy and remained proper emblem, for the high hat the lineal descendant of the hat that dominated the French Revolution. Moreover, the high hat, achievement of true modernity, with it assumed the habit of from top to toe, a form he destined to keep for centuries to come.
