Mr Noble was about to replace a belt on the pulley connected to a bolting machine in the mill. They were both members of the Pres when the sleeve of his shirt caught in a revolving screw. He was unable to remove his arm and the screw wound his clothes around in a ball. Mr Noble was rapidly caught in the meshes of the belt, hauled ceilingwards and was pitched between the shafting and the ceiling onto a pile of sawdest on the far side of the machine. His shirt, vest and overalls had been torn from his body and were cut into ribbons.
